1           SUBCOMMITTEE CHAIRMAN BROWNE: I want to convene 2 the hearing for the Subcommittee on Family Law of the 3 Judiciary Committee to gather testimony on Senate Bill 95, 4 which makes various changes to the Domestic Relations Code.
5 Senate Bill 95, as members are probably aware, is a product 6 of the Advisory Committee on Domestic Relations Law of the 7 Joint State Government Commission. The advisory committee 8 was formed in 1993 pursuant to Senate Resolution 43. The 9 Senate Resolution established the advisory committee and 10 directed it to undertake a study of Domestic Relations Law 11 with the duty of reporting to the General Assembly 12 recommendations which could be implemented through 13 legislation. Major provisions of Senate Bill 95, which is 14 incidentally sponsored by Senator Greenleaf, Chairman of 15 the Senate Judiciary Committee, deals with premarital 16 agreements, bifurcation, and equitable division of marital 17 property. I won't get into any more details on the bill, 18 but I'm sure we will as part of this hearing.

19           Just two administrative notes. Written 20 testimony from nonwitnesses will be made a part of the 21 record. And we had one scheduling change. Harry Byrne of 22 the PBA had a family emergency and won't be able to 23 testify, so we'll have a short break if David Pollock 24 doesn't come early for his testimony.

25           Without further adieu, I'd like to call our

1 first witness, who is Ned Hark, Esquire, American Academy
2 of Matrimonial Lawyers, Pennsylvania Chapter. Thank you,
3 Attorney Hark, for your participation today.

4 MR. HARK: Thank you for having me. Good
5 afternoon. My name is Ned Hark. I'm here this afternoon
6 on behalf of the Pennsylvania Chapter of the American 7 Academy of Matrimonial Lawyers, and as a Past Chair of the 8 Philadelphia Bar Association Family Law Section to speak
9 with you regarding Senate Bill 95. My testimony this 10 afternoon will both support the passage of the provisions 11 of Senate Bill 95 and urge to you consider reintroducing 12 language that was in prior drafts of the bill.

13 As you are aware, Senate Bill 95 is the result 14 of the hard work of the Advisory Committee on Domestic 15 Relations Law of the Joint State Government Commission.
16 The committee was comprised of many of my colleagues who 17 are leaders in the area of family law both as practitioners
18 and now some as members of the bench. Senate Bill 95 19 codifies and clarifies many areas of the Divorce Code which 20 practitioners, Masters, and courts have struggled with over 21 the years. Implementation of laws such as are provided for 22 in Senate Bill 95 encourages a more effective and efficient 23 court system for the citizens of Pennsylvania who become 24 involved in the process.

25 The proposed legislation brings changes to

1 issues dealt with in divorce, specifically premarital
2 agreements, bifurcation factors, and determining equitable 3 distribution, including increase in value and determination 4 of pension and retirement benefits, and the codification of 5 definitions which have tended to cause some confusion in 6 the minds of both attorneys and judges that hear divorce
7 cases. The provisions in the bill concerning premarital 8 agreements are fashioned both from the existing case law in 9 Pennsylvania and provisions of the uniform premarital 10 agreement act. The proposed Section 3106 protects the 11 parties entering into the premarital settlement agreements 12 by providing safeguards against undue influence, 13 unconscionability and a lack of full and fair disclosure 14 while providing a high standard to be met to set aside or 15 void the agreement. The proposed statutory provisions 16 concerning premarital agreements recognizes the frequent 17 argument that the agreement was entered into immediately 18 before or very close in time to the marriage, and therefore 19 raises the issue of duress. By implementing the 60-day 20 period, the proposed statute seeks to eliminate the 21 confusion and concerns that are raised by the execution of 22 a premarital agreement, sometimes literally on the eve or 23 day of a wedding. The 60 days, and I'll add, I don't have 24 this in the written testimony, but the 60 days as far as my 25 knowledge and my conversations with people that were

1 involved in the original draft when the Joint State 2 Commission was basically the cut-off time from when the 3 wedding invitations go out prior to the wedding, because 4 that's where, and I won't call it duress, but that's where 5 the periods of, oh my God, I'm being presented with this 6 agreement and everybody knows there's a wedding. That's 7 the period of time where the most difficult decisionmaking 8 process is involved prior to the wedding, so basically 9 that's where that 60 days comes from.

10 Another area of divorce litigation that has been 11 evolving through the case law over the years is that of 12 bifurcation. Provisions of Section 3323(C)1 of the Divorce 13 Code gives statutory guidance to the court to follow when 14 considering petitions for bifurcation. New subsection (C)1 15 provides for bifurcation aside from those situations where 16 the parties consent. Bifurcation would be granted only 17 when divorce grounds have been established and the moving 18 party has demonstrated that compelling circumstances exist 19 to enter a divorce decree and there have been more 20 sufficient economic protections provided to the nonmoving 21 party during the pendency of the remainder of the divorce
22 proceedings. While I will allude to the time period 23 considerations at a latter point in my testimony, it is 24 clear that the proposed statute sets forth adequate and 25 necessary protections for the nonmoving party that are so

1 often a concern to the litigant and to the court in 2 considering the issue of bifurcation.

3 The proposed legislation also makes several 4 changes with regard to the equitable distribution of 5 property and determination of property rights and values in 6 divorce matters. Proposed statute provides procedures for 7 calculation of increases and decreases in value of 8 premarital property. The statute also provides that 9 potential tax consequences must be considered with respect 10 to the distribution of assets by mandating that the court 11 consider the economic circumstances of each party, 12 including the Federal, State, and local tax ramifications
13 of the asset distribution. Provision requiring the court's 14 consideration of the expense of sale, transfer, or 15 liquidation associated with a particular asset is important 16 as it eliminates the problems of courts in different 17 counties treating differently the costs of the sale of a 18 marital asset. These provisions, with regard to asset 19 distribution and value, as I stated are of particular 20 concern because in the counties that I practice in in 21 southeastern Pennsylvania, many of the courts have 22 different policies and procedures with regard to the 23 treatment of an asset and the valuation of an asset. Most 24 commonly we see the difference and the difference in 25 procedure and in theory in whether or not to deduct the

1 expense of sale or potential sale from a marital home when 2 the contemplation is that one party is going to receive the 3 home in equitable distribution and not sell it. It varies 4 from county to county whether or not to apply the 7 1/2 or 5 8 percent of the cost of sale to the value, therefore 6 making the value less. With the increase in value of real 7 estate in today's market, it becomes more and more of an 8 issue, the 7 1/2 or 8 percent. This type of legislation 9 would help clarify and codify the language of the statute
10 and help enable settlement or facilitate settlement before 11 trial or before a hearing before a master.

12 Similarly, the provisions with regard to the 13 treatment of increase and decrease in value, where you have 14 stocks or mutual funds or things, some have gone up some 15 have gone down, the proposed statute would give more 16 guidance to how to treat the increase and decrease in value 17 of premarital property, because the only issue that we're 18 dealing with when a piece of property or property is 19 premarital is what is the increase in value from the date 20 of marriage to the date of separation. So the fact that 21 there's somewhat of a formula and guidance for how to treat 22 both the increase and decrease in value would help in the 23 evaluation and settlement of equitable distribution 24 matters.

25 Many times during the pendency of a divorce

1 action and the associated equitable distribution matter, it
2 becomes necessary for a partial distribution of assets.
3 Provisions set forth in proposed Section 3502(F) gives the 4 courts the authority to enter an order providing for 5 interim distribution or assignment of marital property;
6 thus easing the financial burden of economically dependent 7 spouses.

8 In addition to the aforementioned valuation and 9 distribution provisions, the proposed statute at 3501(C)
10 codifies a methodology for evaluation of defined benefit 11 retirement plans. It sets forth provisions for situations 12 where it is impractical to do an immediate offset of a 13 pension, but the nonemployee spouse's share cannot be 14 covered by another marital asset. Consideration is also 15 given to pensions which have not yet vested. In those 16 instances, the statute provides for a deferral of the 17 distribution of the pension.

18 The aforementioned changes and additions to 19 Title 23 with regard to equitable distribution provide 20 guidance and would enable attorneys and litigants to better 21 evaluate their cases and clarify issues so that settlements 22 can be more promptly effectuated. The matters where 23 settlements cannot be reached, the proposed statute gives 24 the courts statutory authority to rule on these issues in a 25 clear, concise, and consistent fashion. And again, I'll go

1 back briefly to the codification of the methodology for 2 evaluating pension. Many times in cases where you have a 3 limited amount of assets, not so much dollar wise but 4 limited amount of assets that are actually at issue, both 5 spouses may or may not have a retirement plan and you have 6 the marital home and some other real estate, the tug of war 7 enters into how to, the evaluation of the pension, how 8 we're going to distribute the pension, when we're going to 9 distribute the pension. What the statute does is requires 10 that offset and enables the court to better get to the 11 offset of the pension and gives it some guidance on how to 12 distribute a pension that's not yet vested, because many 13 times where you have that limited amount of assets, there 14 is going to be deferral of the pension. It's going to be a 15 qualified Domestic Relations order. Down the road, there's 16 going to be distribution, and it's going to take effect.
17 This, again, would help give more guidance to how to handle 18 that type of situation.

19 While I've covered many different areas of the 20 amendments to Title 23 included in Senate Bill 95, there is 21 one area of concern that appeared in prior drafts of Senate 22 Bill 95 and the report of the Advisory Committee on 23 Domestic Relations Law of the Joint State Commission. I am 24 referring to the provisions of Section 3301(D) of the 25 Divorce Code, the provisions with regard to irretrievable

1 breakdown of marriage. Prior drafts of the bill included a 2 change from the two-year waiting period to establish 3 grounds for irretrievable breakdown to a one-year waiting 4 period. The proposed legislation that was originally 5 supported by the Pennsylvania Chapter of the American 6 Academy of Matrimonial Attorneys and many of my colleagues
7 who I practice with and against reduce the separation
8 period under subsection D from two years to one years. It 9 is the experience of many practitioners that the parties 10 will know after one year whether there is any prospect of 11 reconciliation. A reduction in the period of time for the 12 entry of a grounds order pursuant to 3301(D) of the Divorce 13 Code eliminates a potential extended period of time of 14 litigation between the parties where the financial 15 dependence, hostility, and animosity and potential 16 involvement of ancillary issues, including custody, become 17 magnified. Reduction of the time period to obtain a 18 divorce to one year should be included in Senate Bill 95, 19 as it was in prior drafts. While I and the Pennsylvania 20 Chapter of the American Academy of Matrimonial Lawyers 21 encourages the inclusion of the reduced time periods for 22 divorce pursue want to the irretrievable breakdown 23 provisions in Senate Bill 95, by no means am I suggesting 24 to this committee today that the bill not be passed because 25 those provisions were not included. As I previously

1 stated, there were many important practical changes and 2 additions to the divorce law and laws concerning equitable 3 distribution of property rights that should be included in 4 Title 23 that will enable us to better effectuate justice
5 and family courts of this Commonwealth. And let me add 6 that I stated at the beginning of my testimony that I'm 7 here on behalf of the Pennsylvania chapter of the academy, 8 American Academy of Matrimonial Lawyers, and as a Past 9 Chair of the Family Law Section of the Philadelphia Bar
10 Association. The Philadelphia Bar Association has not yet
11 adopted an official position with regard to Senate Bill 95, 12 but I can tell you that many and most of its provisions 13 will be supported by a large majority of the executive 14 committee and of the Family Law Section itself, and 15 hopefully ultimately, upon recommendation of that section, 16 the entire Philadelphia Bar Association. However, I cannot 17 formally inform you of the position of the Philadelphia Bar 18 Association today.

19 I thank you for allowing me to present my 20 testimony.

21 SUBCOMMITTEE CHAIRMAN BROWNE: Thank you,
22 Attorney Hark, for your testimony.

23 Before I open it up to questions by the 24 committee members, I just want to introduce the members of 25 the committee for the record who are with us today.

1 Representative Manderino from Philadelphia and 2 Montgomery Counties; Representative Hennessey from Chester
3 County; Representative Harper from Montgomery County, 4 Representative Petrarca from Allegheny County. Did I get 5 it right?

6 REPRESENTATIVE PETRONE: Westmoreland.

7 SUBCOMMITTEE CHAIRMAN BROWNE: Westmoreland
8 County, sorry.

9 Representative Walko from Allegheny County, and 10 Representative Reichley, Lehigh and Berks Counties.

11 Do any Members have questions? Representative
12 Manderino.

13 REPRESENTATIVE MANDERINO: Thank you. Thank you 14 for being here.

15 Your testimony was very good and answered some 16 of my questions, and I did not have the benefit of being 17 able to read the Joint State Government Commission report 18 prior to this, which I will do afterwards, and maybe some 19 of my questions are addressed there, but since I have you 20 here, under the section that deals with premarital 21 agreements, and it might be easiest if you have the bill to 22 follow me by looking at, starting on line 15, section 2(i) 23 and section 2(iii), I guess I don't understand what the 24 difference is between fair, reasonable disclosure of the 25 property or financial obligations, and did not have

1       adequate knowledge of the property or financial 2       obligations, and can you explain to me what the difference 3       between those two are? And then, what does "did not have 4       adequate knowledge" mean with regard to a person and a 5       clear and convincing evidence burden of proof?

6               MR. HARK: The fair and reasonable disclosure, 7       as far as I interpret Section 3106 and my experience in 8       dealing with premarital agreements in case law, would 9       indicate that there would be a duty upon the one party to 10       present the fair and reasonable disclosure. In other 11       words, outline what the assets actually are, disclose the 12       existence of the assets to the other party, to the 13       potential spouse, and the adequate knowledge is the other 14       spouse, the nonpresenting spouse actually getting the 15       knowledge that that property exists and that these 16       potential financial obligations exist. I guess what I'm 17       saying, I read it as being what the obligation is to 18       disclose, and then the actual knowledge that the 19       nonpresenting party gains as through the existence of those 20       assets. It's kind of a hand-in-hand type of situation.

21               REPRESENTATIVE MANDERINO: Can you give it to me
22       in a concrete, like I'm sitting here thinking somebody 23       presents, the person who wants the premarital agreement
24       presents the document that says I have holdings in XYZ 25       corporation and all of that is exempt from any marital

1 property and anything that might happen in the future. And 2 is that a fair and reasonable disclosure? But then the 3 other party can come in and say, well, but wait a minute, I 4 didn't know that meant $30 million, and then how does that 5 lack of adequate -- I guess I just don't understand how 6 they work together and I don't understand if you are the 7 person who was presented the agreement and signed it, then 8 how does this language impact your challenging that 9 agreement under clear and convincing -- I don't mean to 10 make this complicated. I guess adequate knowledge seems so 11 subjective, and clear and convincing evidence seems such a 12 high burden, and I'm trying to understand how they work 13 together in the real world.

14 MR. HARK: The presentation of an enumeration of 15 the assets themselves, the actual disclosure, as I said, is 16 the obligation of the person presenting the agreement. The 17 ability to gain the knowledge to the nonpresenting party, 18 the party that's receiving the agreement, and works, I see 19 it as an outgrowth of the disclosure. You tell them what 20 assets you have, how many shares of stock you have, what 21 pieces of real estate you own, where they are owned, what 22 parcels they are, and you have basically set forth the 23 values or potential values, and then the receiving spouse 24 gains the knowledge that they exist.

25 I imagine, and I understand where you're saying,

1 you know, if you've made the disclosure, then they have the 2 knowledge. I think that's what you're saying. Where does, 3 I think you're asking where does the break point come in?
4 Where do you stop having disclosure, where does disclosure
5 stop and knowledge begin? And I think the fair and full 6 disclosure means I've told you everything about what I
7 have, and the knowledge that's there, I'm not doing 8 anything to impede your investigative processes somewhere 9 along the line once I have made that disclosure. And the 10 clear and convincing evidence that that wasn't -- I think 11 you're asking how do we prove that it wasn't done?

12 REPRESENTATIVE MANDERINO: Well, I'm just 13 wondering if (iii), "did not have an adequate knowledge" is 14 kind of like a -- I can't figure out, I mean, it seems like 15 (i,) the act of disclosure, is on the presenting party of 16 the agreement.

17 MR. HARK: Correct.

18 REPRESENTATIVE MANDERINO: And (iii), the 19 adequate knowledge, is on the understanding of the person 20 signing the agreement, the receiving end of the prenup.
21 So, and if that's correct, then is (iii) kind of this 22 catch-all that lets me go back in and say, I really didn't 23 understand what I had been told, or is there some sort of 24 action of nondisclosure, not full -- I just--

25 MR. HARK: I think you're saying where does the 1 duty to disclose or the proof that there wasn't the 2 disclosure leave off and the knowledge actually begin?

3 REPRESENTATIVE MANDERINO: Right, and how do you 4 litigate that under clear and convincing evidence? The 5 whole notion behind pre-nups and the whole notion of us
6 further describing it is to make things more clear cut 7 instead of making them the potential sources of litigation, 8 and I'm reading this and saying, unless I'm making it more 9 complicated, doesn't this "did not have an adequate 10 knowledge" just open the door to litigation about what my 11 understanding was, or am I reading it wrong?

12 MR. HARK: It may open the door.

13 MR. HOWETT: Representative Manderino, if I
14 could attempted to answer your question, my name is Jack 15 Howett, H-O-W-E-T-T, I'm scheduled to testify later. The 16 provisions that are here, and I'm answering this sort of in 17 lieu of Albert Momjian, who was actually going to be 18 addressing this particular subject and will in his 19 testimony later.

20 REPRESENTATIVE MANDERINO: I can hold my 21 question until then.

22 MR. HOWETT: Well, I can try and address it.
23 This is basically a codification of existing Pennsylvania 24 law as far as disclosure is concerned. In determining the 25 validity of a prenuptial agreement, if the dependent

1 spouse, the spouse without the money, that spouse must, in 2 order to set aside the agreement, show that there was 3 either a lack of voluntary execution under paragraph (i),
4 and that's a very well-defined criteria under Pennsylvania 5 law as far as what is voluntary or what is not voluntary 6 disclosure. We're not changing anything in that regard.

7           And in part 2, the party, before executing the 8 agreement, didn't have all of these three things, wasn't 9 provided a fair and reasonable disclosure of the property.
10 In other words, she has to prove that she wasn't given fair 11 and reasonable disclosure. Generally, that's proven by a 12 writing that's attached to the agreement, so that it's very 13 difficult to say I didn't get it when they've signed the 14 agreement. They must also prove that they didn't waive 15 disclosure, so a person can say, I don't want disclosure, 16 I'm willing to waive it.

17           And finally, they have to be able to show that 18 they didn't have, and this is part (iii), and this may be 19 the part that sort of raises the question that they didn't 20 have adequate knowledge of the property, in other words, 21 they didn't have factual knowledge. So the decisional law 22 that has built up over this particular issue is that let's 23 say a couple has lived together for a year or two or knew 24 each other very well before they got married and before the 25 prenuptial agreement was executed. Even though there

1 wasn't written disclosure that was attached to the 2 agreement, there is a provable disclosure in fact. In 3 other words, the dependent spouse in fact knew that this 4 person owned a large business that was very successful, 5 knew that this person lived the life that only a wealthy 6 person could live, knew that this person worked for AT&T or 7 Pricewaterhouse or owned their own business of ABC 8 Corporation, knew that this person had a lifestyle that 9 provided for lots of travel, entertainment, and things like 10 that. So paragraph (iii), this Roman (iii), is intended to 11 pick up disclosure in fact. If the dependent spouse can 12 show that I didn't have disclosure in fact, I had no reason 13 really to know what this person's assets or liabilities 14 were, we knew each other but we dated for a while and we 15 didn't share any financial information, and that there 16 wasn't a waiver and that there wasn't written disclosure, 17 then she could set aside -- I use "she," but it could be 18 either side -- set aside the agreement. I don't know if 19 that helps your--

20 REPRESENTATIVE MANDERINO: Well, I think what 21 helps more is that we're not changing the current standard 22 but codifying existing. It kind of makes me, if I 23 understood that part of what you're saying--

24 MR. HOWETT: Yes, Ma'am.

25 REPRESENTATIVE MANDERINO: --it makes me more

1 comfortable that we're not introducing a new release
2 clause. I can't think of the right word.

3 MR. HOWETT: Right. Paragraphs 1 and 2 and the 4 three subparts of paragraph 2 are codifications of existing 5 law. They are also basically consistent with the Uniform
6 Premarital Agreement Act. We've modified the uniform act 7 somewhat in order to make it comply with existing 8 Pennsylvania decisional law.

9 REPRESENTATIVE MANDERINO: Two other short 10 questions, if I may. I'm assuming the calculation on the 11 defined benefit retirement plans is something that all 12 interested parties agree doesn't unduly benefit or harm any 13 one side of the equation. So if, for example, if you had a 14 nonworking spouse and a spouse who has worked 30 years for 15 a pension, no one is arguing that one side or -- there's no 16 argument about whether this equation that we're codifying 17 is detrimental or beneficial to any one side.

18 MR. HOWETT: That also came out of my 19 Subcommittee on Equitable Distribution and would be part of 20 my testimony. This is not quite as clear-cut as the 21 prenuptial agreement as far as codification of existing 22 law. In fact, what this legislation does and is intended 23 to do, and specifically stated in the commentary in the 24 report, which you will, when you do read it, you'll see, is 25 intended to reverse actually two decisions of the 1 Pennsylvania Supreme Court. One is called Berrington vs.

2 Berrington, the other is Katzenburger vs. Katzenburger.

3 Those decisions were rendered in 1993, I think, it might 4 have been a little later than that, I'm sorry, but in any 5 case, they changed what had been the Pennsylvania law up 6 until that point, and what this legislation is trying to do 7 is put it back to that.

8 Back to what? Back to a coverture fraction that 9 takes the period of time that the wage earner, the pension
10 earner, worked for the pension during the marriage. So 11 let's say that the person worked 5 years before the 12 marriage, and then they were married for 10 years, and then 13 worked 8 years after the marriage. Okay. So there's 10 14 years out of 23 years, 10/23 is your fraction. So if 15 you're doing a deferred distribution, in other words, by 16 the time the person retires, he has worked 8 years after 17 separating, 10/23 is the marital portion. If you're doing 18 50/50, she gets half of 10/23.

19 If you're going to do an immediate offset in the 20 pension, in other words, you're not going to defer it, 21 you're going to value that pension now and you're going to 22 give some compensating asset, the house, which is very 23 typical, one gets the pension, the other gets the house, 24 then you value that pension based on, again, a coverture
25 fraction, but the fraction this time is that the numerator

1 is the number of years in the pension up until the time of 2 trial over -- I'm sorry, the number of years of marriage
3 over the number of years in the pension up until the time 4 of trial, because you're not going to go beyond the time of 5 trial to do the immediate offset. So it's still a 6 coverture fraction.

7 What this changes is that the dependent spouse 8 is now entitled to receive the benefit of the growth of the 9 pension up until the time of distribution, either offset at 10 trial or deferred distribution when retirement actually 11 occurs, except for the post-separation contributions of the 12 pension earner himself or herself. Under Berrington and 13 Katzenburger, the Supreme Court said that you have to stop 14 it at the date of separation, and anything that happens 15 after separation belongs to the pension earner. This has 16 sort of been analogized to the spouse who plants the seed, 17 waters the corn, watches it grow, and then separates and 18 the corn is plucked right after separation and that spouse 19 doesn't get to participate in it at all.

20 It is generally believed by the practicing bar, 21 by the practicing bench, and by people who are very 22 knowledgeable in the field, that the coverture fraction 23 methodology that was the law in Pennsylvania up until the 24 Berrington case was decided is by far the more equitable 25 and fairer way to do this. And that was codified in a case

1 -- I'm sorry, not codified but was elucidated in a case
2 called Holland vs. Holland, which was a Superior Court 3 case, which everybody thought was, this is it, this is the 4 way to go, this is the proper way to do it, and then two or 5 three year later Berrington came along and I think was 6 interpreted because of certain language in the statute that 7 was never intended to be that way. So this clarifies now 8 that it is to be done by a coverture fraction, and that the 9 only benefits that are to be excluded are the benefits 10 actually contributed by the pension earner after 11 separation.

12 REPRESENTATIVE MANDERINO: Thank you.

13 SUBCOMMITTEE CHAIRMAN BROWNE: Thank you.

14 Representative Hennessey.

15 REPRESENTATIVE HENNESSEY: Thank you, Mr.

16 Chairman.

17 Mr. Hark, Mr. Howett, if you could just, your 18 experience, Mr. Hark, is that you're part of the American 19 Academy of Matrimonial Lawyers, I saw from your bio. In 20 today's society, what percentage of cases which present 21 themselves to you initially get reconciled as opposed to 22 the portion of the pie, so to speak, that go and ultimately 23 end in divorce of their partners?

24 MR. Hark: I would say in my own practice, in my 25 practical experience where the parties actually, you're

1 talking about where the divorce complaint or the 2 proceedings have been instituted and then--

3 REPRESENTATIVE HENNESSEY: No, somebody walks
4 into your office and says, I want a divorce, I can't stand 5 my husband or I can't stand my wife, if you just took all 6 of those cases and lumped them together, what percentage 7 would ultimately be reconciled as opposed to proceeding to 8 a divorce?

9 MR. HARK: That's a good question. Probably I
10 would say a very small percentage. High side, maybe 5
11 percent. Maybe somewhere between 5 and 10 percent. It's a 12 hard question because so many people come to us for 13 guidance when they're contemplating a separation or have 14 just separated and they're looking for different guidance 15 as far as financial obligations or the procedures or even 16 matters involving a potential custody case that you really 17 can't put your finger on it, and it's a hard percentage too 18 because sometimes those people never come back, so you 19 don't know what's happened with regard to the cases.
20 That's why I asked, I think a better barometer or a better 21 measuring stick may be in cases in which we actually have 22 some proceeding, whether it be a divorce complaint filed, 23 or even if there's not a divorce complaint filed, there's 24 been a separation and there's a support petition generated 25 and the people have actually entered into the process with

1 regard to the courts, and I think that's where my 5 percent
2 comes out of. Because those are the ones that we're better 3 able to know that the parties actually reconciled after 4 being separated.

5 REPRESENTATIVE HENNESSEY: It just seems to me
6 that we've witnessed in Pennsylvania a sea change in terms 7 of the attitudes toward reconciling or proceeding with 8 divorce as a result of the no fault changes that we made 9 back in '79 or '80, and that we're now seeking to modify 10 it. And that probably is reflective of society in general.
11 I remember the talk years ago that Ronald Reagan couldn't 12 get elected as President in the '60s because he had a 13 divorce in his background. By 1980, it didn't seem to make 14 any difference. So maybe that's good, but it just seemed 15 to me that the two-year statutory waiting period that we 16 have in existing law was probably put there to try to give 17 -- I think when I first came out we called it a cooling off 18 period, to try to give reconciliation a chance to work with 19 some sort of indication that as a matter of public policy, 20 it was a better idea to try to save a marriage than to see 21 it torn apart. And the question I'm going to ask you then 22 is, to shorten the two-year period to a one-year period of 23 cooling off basically almost seems to me that we might as 24 well forget the 5 percent, we'll probably get down to 2 25 percent, because there's not going to be any timeframe

1 that's a real burden for a person who wants to -- who is 2 the moving party and wants a divorce.

3 MR. HARK: I think that the 5 percent occurs in 4 the first few months after separation, and that my 5 experience is that once we've reached the 9-, 10-month, 6 12-month, and the 1-year period of time, people generally 7 know by that point in time, especially if there's 8 litigation, what their feelings are regarding 9 reconciliation. I can safely say that I can't recall in my 10 practice where we've gone down the road well past the year 11 and we're litigating the case that the parties have 12 reconciled. My experience is that the reconciliation takes 13 place in the very few early weeks or months of the 14 separation, and again, I'm not, when I say separation, I'm 15 talking about the commencement of proceedings, because--

16 REPRESENTATIVE HENNESSEY: When it all seems 17 real to the nonmoving spouse.

18 MR. HARK: That would be correct.

19 REPRESENTATIVE HENNESSEY: But the point that I
20 was trying to make, and maybe I didn't make it very well, 21 is that if you're looking at a divorce, if you're the 22 ambushed spouse, so to speak, whether the husband or the 23 wife, if you're the person who didn't see it coming or has 24 no desire for a divorce and then suddenly the reality hits 25 home when the divorce complaint is served, then I suppose

1 you look at the two-year statute as saying, well, that's 2 going to be a help to me and a burden to the other side who 3 wants this, and maybe he or she will change their mind. If 4 we shorten that, and perhaps that's why 5 percent of the 5 cases that do reconcile reconcile at least in part by the 6 idea that the moving party finds that this isn't going to 7 be as easy as I thought, and I may well, it's not going to 8 be three months like the guy told me or like I hear about 9 at work, this could take a couple of years, maybe we ought 10 to rethink this. If we, as a matter of public policy, 11 shorten the time period, don't we essentially say that 12 reconciliation is really a thing of the past, it's not 13 going to happen, and let's just move it along as quickly as 14 we possibly can?

15 MR. HARK: Again, not necessarily, because if 16 the reconciliation is going to take place, my point is that 17 after a year of separation, and especially when there's 18 litigation, if the one party who wants the divorce hasn't 19 changed his or her mind, it's very unlikely that over the 20 course of the next year they're going to change their mind.
21 And I think if you balanced the interests, that in the 22 ensuing year of litigation, there are a lot of different 23 things that come up and crop up along the way, and as I 24 pointed out in my testimony, the hostility, it spills over 25 into child custody issues, there are issues that could

1 arise with regard to the potential dissipation of an asset,
2 devaluation of an asset, especially if there's a business 3 involved. The one-year period of time in the case where 4 the one spouse may not want it and the other one is not 5 making up their mind, that period of time, that year of 6 litigation could become very costly to both parties. And 7 the point is that if the one spouse who doesn't want it, 8 the nonambushed spouse in your hypothetical, does not want 9 the reconciliation or has made up his or her own mind that 10 this is what's going to happen, they're generally not going 11 to change their mind in that year between the end of year 1 12 and year 2, beginning of year 2.

13 REPRESENTATIVE HENNESSEY: I guess I'm just 14 trying to figure out what the public policy implications 15 are of shortening that timeframe. I used to practice some 16 matrimonial law as part of a general practice and it always 17 seemed to me that if there was going to be, if you were 18 going to strike a deal for property, for example, it made 19 more sense to do it -- the ambushed party had the best 20 leverage in the first year rather than the second because 21 psychologically you hit a point where the person who wants 22 out of the marriage says, oh my God, I've got to wait for 23 two years to get this thing over with, and once you get to 24 the point where, hey, I've waited for 14 months already, 25 it's only 10 months more, what's the big deal, the 1 leverage, there is a monumental change I think in the 2 bargaining power of the parties, and it would seem to me

3 that maybe as a matter of public policy we ought to leave 4 the ambushed spouse with having some arrows in his or her 5 quiver in terms of negotiating for an ultimate settlement.

6 But I understand your position and I think 7 you're speaking for the academy as well when you say you 8 prefer that we shorten the timeframe, even though that was 9 left out of this particular draft.

10 MR. HARK: The bill that was -- the proposed 11 legislation that was supported by the academy included the 12 one-year provision that was stricken out of this current 13 draft.

14 REPRESENTATIVE HENNESSEY: Okay. Thank you.

15 Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

16 SUBCOMMITTEE CHAIRMAN BROWNE: Thank you.

17 Just two quick questions before we finish up 18 here. You had made some comments regarding the change in 19 the statute and its relations to tax implications and cost 20 of sale of assets. Is the language of the statute, is it 21 different than what's currently established along those 22 issues? It's my understanding that in order for tax 23 implications that are taken into account, it has to be 24 something that's immediate and is part of the tax effect 25 that occurs as part of the divorce.

1 MR. HOWETT: Mr. Chairman, if I may address
2 that, this has been a pet peeve of mine for a long time.
3 In 1988, when we assisted in drafting the substantial 4 amendments that were done at that time, which were the 5 first major amendments to the 1980 code, the 1988
6 amendments were adopted on February 12, 1988. I'm not 7 trying to impress you with my knowledge of that but rather 8 to show the significance of why the decisional law today is 9 that the tax implications or the costs of sale have to be 10 immediate and certain in order to be taken into account.

11 The Hovis case, H-O-V-I-S, which is cited in the book, in 12 the report of the task force, was decided by the Supreme 13 Court in April of 1988. It came down after the amendments 14 had been passed. The amendments say that you should take 15 into account the tax ramifications and the costs of sale.

16 The only thing this legislation does, it says
17 even if it's not immediate and certain. Now, the reason 18 for that is because when the Hovis case came down from the 19 Supreme Court and it said you have to look at the tax 20 implications and you can only do it if it's immediate and 21 certain, they said because the legislature hasn't addressed 22 that, and this is up to the legislature. They never once 23 mentioned the 1988 amendments. The case was presented and 24 argued to the Supreme Court well in advance of February 12, 25 1988. It wasn't handed down until April of 1988, and while

1 I can't prove this because I was not in chambers when it
2 was decided, I am willing to bet you an annual pay of yours
3 and mine that that case was decided under the 1980 code, 4 because they specifically said it's up to the legislature 5 to deal with this. So when they handed it down, nobody on 6 the Supreme Court had any immediate knowledge--I'm not 7 faulting them, this is the way things work, it takes a 8 while to circulate the things--realized that the 9 legislature had addressed it.

10 So now what you're saying with this new bill is 11 that we said it before, and we really mean it. Tax 12 implications and costs of sale should be taken into 13 account.

14 SUBCOMMITTEE CHAIRMAN BROWNE: Without the 15 immediate effect.

16 MR. HOWETT: Even if they're not immediate and 17 certain. Because in the real world, you know and we know 18 that they are there. Brokerage costs, real estate costs, 19 tax costs, whatever. They're there, and if you can present 20 evidence reasonably to show what they are or what they will 21 be when the asset is sold, even if the asset isn't going to 22 be sold tomorrow or is not under contract yet, then that 23 should be taken into account. Because otherwise you are 24 giving the other spouse, and we're not saying wealthy, 25 nonwealthy, male, female, but you're giving the other

1 spouse cash assets or real assets to compensate for that 2 asset that's going to belong to, let's say the house is 3 going to belong to one side and you're going to give 4 compensating cash to the other side, but when this side
5 liquidates that house, they're going to have to pay 7 6 percent real estate and 1 percent transfer tax. And that's 7 a real cost.

8 Now, you say, what about those who don't use a 9 real estate agent? There are always cases where, you're 10 not going to be able to pass a statute that covers every 11 single thing. You have to look at what is real in life
12 today, and that's what this is intended to do. You said it 13 in 1988, 16 years ago, that was the intent of that change
14 to the 1980 code, and because of the timing of the Hovis 15 case, that intent was never implemented. So now this new 16 language is intended to implement what the legislature said 17 in 1988.

18 SUBCOMMITTEE CHAIRMAN BROWNE: Thank you.

19 And the other question I have, I just wanted to 20 make sure I understood the policy behind the distribution 21 rules in regards to pensions. You have consideration of 22 post-separation of contributions by the participating 23 spouse, but you wouldn't have considerations of salary 24 increases or multiplier adjustments.

25 MR. HOWETT: No, they would be considered. The 1 only thing that wouldn't be considered under this 2 legislation is actual contributions by the employed spouse.

3 Let's say you're in a situation where you contribute some 4 of your salary to the pension. Those contributions and the 5 earnings or losses on those contributions would remain that 6 spouse's property.

7 SUBCOMMITTEE CHAIRMAN BROWNE: So salary
8 adjustments in perpetuity for the next 40 years, whatever, 9 would be considered as part of it?

10 MR. HOWETT: They would be considered in a 11 defined benefit plan because that's how a defined benefit 12 plan works. You look at the last two or last three years' 13 average salary and then you take it times a formula of the 14 number of months worked or the number of years worked and 15 you figure out what the monthly benefit is going to be. So 16 as the income goes up, that is nothing more than a 17 function, in many instances, of time, but even if it's a 18 function of value of increased participation in the 19 employer's activities and therefore you're getting raises, 20 you're doing better, that's building upon a foundation, a 21 good portion of which was during the marriage. So the 22 marriage unit is compensated by use of that coverture 23 fraction.

24 If the person works 30 years for the company and 25 was only married 10 of those 30 years, then that

1 contribution may not be as great because it's only 10 out
2 of the 30 years, and consequently the marriage only shares 3 in 10/30, or one-third, of the pension. But if the 4 marriage was 25 out of 30 years, and two or three years 5 were premarital and two or three years were 6 post-separation, then it's absolutely fair to say that 7 25/30 should be marital. The earning spouse, the employed 8 spouse, still gets the benefit of keeping a portion of the 9 pension as separate property, but you do it by simply a 10 lineal fraction so that each year of the 30 years is 11 considered under this concept to be equal, even though it's 12 clear that the post-separation years are not really equal.

13 SUBCOMMITTEE CHAIRMAN BROWNE: Just taking the 14 other side, I think some people would argue that the amount 15 that you would receive with that fraction would be if there 16 is a significant increase in salary post-separation which 17 would be a lot higher than you would ordinarily receive 18 based on the amount that you actually received during the 19 marriage. In other words, if there's a huge increase in 20 salary post-separation, that fraction would, by taking that 21 salary into account, would be a lot higher than that person 22 would ordinarily receive for that period of time.

23 MR. HOWETT: The fraction would be the same, but 24 the amount that the fraction is applied to would be higher 25 because of the nature of the formula that's used in a

1 defined benefit pension plan. The formula, because it uses
2 the last couple of years' salary, is going to result in a 3 higher value for the plan, or a higher monthly payment, if 4 you will, when you get to the retirement period. The 5 coverture fraction that's applied to that number is what 6 this legislation does, and the longer the marriage in 7 comparison to the period of time that the person worked for 8 the company that provided the pension, then the higher the 9 fraction that belongs to the marriage.

10 SUBCOMMITTEE CHAIRMAN BROWNE: I understand how 11 the fraction works. It's just you have huge circumstances 12 that could happen after the marriage.

13 MR. HOWETT: Oh, there's no question. In fact, 14 there are examples of this in decisional law. The 15 Berrington case, the Katzenburger case both involve cases 16 where there were spikes in income post-separation, and the 17 argument that supports what we're trying to do in this 18 legislation is that the spouses in those cases, and it 19 could be male or female, in those cases the dependent 20 spouses were both women, had worked in the vineyards, if 21 you will, or were watering the corn and watching it grow, 22 so for all those years until their spouse got to the point 23 of sufficient seniority where he was going to enjoy big 24 bumps in pay, and in fact did, why shouldn't she share, 25 instead of saying we're going to go back to 3 years earlier

1 when you were making $60,000 a year instead of now you're 2 making $100,000 a year, that could make a big difference in 3 the pension.

4 And when people are making their plans for a 5 marriage, for a life together, and they've been together, 6 particularly in a situation where they've been together for 7 some period of time, they know that these incomes are going 8 to go up and that when you get closer to retirement the 9 value of the pension is going to go up significantly.
10 Shouldn't the dependent spouse share in that benefit to the 11 extent of the coverture fraction? You're not getting all 12 of it. The independent spouse is still getting that 13 portion which represents the number of years worked outside 14 of the marriage.

15 SUBCOMMITTEE CHAIRMAN BROWNE: I understand the 16 argument, I think, and there may be some who would agree 17 with the argument of the case law this is trying to 18 address, and that is the fact that post-separation should 19 not be included because that person was not part of that 20 household after separation, didn't contribute to those huge 21 increases in salary.

22 MR. HOWETT: No, but they contributed to 23 everything that allowed them to happen. Now, I can tell 24 you, and--

25 SUBCOMMITTEE CHAIRMAN BROWNE: I'm not arguing

1 the point. I'm saying that there's a possibility of 2 people--

3 MR. HOWETT: I don't know whether this means
4 anything to you, but from an academic standpoint, and I 5 think this is true around the country, that the manner by 6 which pensions are divided in almost all jurisdictions are 7 the way that is proposed in Senate Bill 95, and that 8 academics and attorneys who represent both sides of the 9 aisle in discussing from the standpoint of what is fair, 10 what should be the law, will tell you that this is the way 11 it should be done.

12 SUBCOMMITTEE CHAIRMAN BROWNE: Okay, thank you
13 very much. Thank you both for your help today.

14 MR. HARK: Thank you.

15 SUBCOMMITTEE CHAIRMAN BROWNE: I've heard that 16 David Pollock is with us. Yes, Mr. Pollock.

17 David Pollock, Esquire, from the Allegheny Bar
18 Association. Thank you for speaking with me here today.

19 MR. POLLOCK: What we have is our written 20 testimony, which is dated April 1, 2002, which is with 21 regard to a very similar bill that has had changes. So I'd 22 like to speak to those issues today as modified by Senate 23 Bill 95.

24 My name is David Pollock, and I am Vice Chair of 25 the Allegheny County Bar Association Family Law Section,

1 and I'm here today on behalf of the Family Law Section of 2 the Allegheny County Bar Association. I am also Past Chair
3 of the PBA Family Law Section, Present Editor of the 4 Pennsylvania Family Lawyer, member of the International and 5 American Academies of Matrimonial Law.

6 Senate Bill 95 that's before you has a provision 7 in it with regard to premarital agreements, and I heard the 8 prior testimony and agree that the 3106(a)1, 2, and then 9 subparagraphs (i), (ii), and (iii), are a codification of 10 existing law, and that clear and convincing standard is the 11 standard to overcome all contracts in this State, whether 12 the contract is a prenuptial contract, a contract for 13 business, commercial, that is the standard and why you 14 apply any other standard to contracts between two unmarried 15 people or married people. As you well know, the 16 Pennsylvania law of prenuptial agreements emanates from 17 Simeone vs. Simeone and that Supreme Court case which 18 established that the single ingredient to the 19 enforceability of a prenuptial agreement of full and fair 20 disclosure, which of course has its exceptions, that is if 21 somebody knew or had reason to know or had voluntary waiver 22 of that, that standard is also applicable to post-nuptial 23 agreements, to marriage settlement agreements. That is our 24 standard.

25 However, this bill has a provision in it that

1 voids agreements if they are entered into 60 days prior to 2 marriage. What the Senate Bill apparently is saying that 3 people who are adults, who enter into contracts 60 days
4 prior to marriage, don't have the mental capacity to do a 5 rational act. Now, we probably ought to have a 60-day 6 requirement with regard to sports cars and other things, 7 because some of us when we see a car with lots of 8 horsepower and lots of glitter and lots of color, we are 9 overcome with a compulsion to buy that car. Why are we 10 singling out the people who are prospective husbands and 11 wives? Typically, the premarital agreements in my practice 12 are second marriages, they are late marriages, or they are 13 family money that needs to be protected. Pennsylvania has 14 been one of those States that has avoided the model act 15 that has come across the country and said we'll let the 16 decisional law continue to be upheld. As a matter of fact, 17 in your statute, you have specifically stated in 1980 that 18 contracts are a way to exclude property from marital 19 property, because we know that all property comes into 20 marriage is marital property, except as you have excluded 21 by statute. And this is just one of those many, many 22 exclusions. To treat people who are in love differently, 23 because I fall in love with cars, okay, to treat people in 24 love differently makes no rational sense.

25 Number two is that clearly I have cases, two

1 existing right now, where the people didn't get their 2 prenup done and they didn't want to have all that worry, 3 and now they're coming in. They're older, they're second 4 marriages, they have families, they're going to fulfill the 5 contractual obligation they had to one another, the 6 handshake they had with one another, because when people 7 get married, they get married with lots of things in mind.
8 Yes, they have heart, they have lust, they have love, but 9 they also have babies on their mind, they have houses on 10 their mind, they have cars on their mind, and some people 11 have prenuptials on their mind. To avoid it is to say that 12 these people are different than all other people. And, if 13 they just wait until the day after they get married and 14 sign the contract, then that's a contract that's binding.

15 Now, you wouldn't say that, well, my goodness, 16 they're now married, they now know better and there isn't 17 any unfair advantage. There's tremendous unfair advantage 18 throughout a marriage and throughout a courtship. Who are 19 we kidding? But I would suggest to you that the Bar 20 Association, Family Law Section, is adamantly opposed to 21 voiding a contract merely because it was entered into 22 during a black-out period of time. It is going to be 23 fraught with danger anyway because matrimonial lawyers from 24 the large urban areas are not the only ones who write 25 prenuptial agreements. And people write prenuptial

1 agreements all the time, and when they write prenuptial
2 agreements, they are unaware of 60 day black-out periods, 3 and I would suggest to you that general practitioners are 4 going to be unaware of it. They're going to pay a lot more 5 attention to a lot of other legislation than this. But 6 this is a trap waiting to happen to people, number one.

7           Number two is you know that people do actually 8 meet, fall in love, and get marry quickly. Whether it is 9 provident or not is none of our business. That means that 10 there are those people who fall in love and get married 11 within 60 days that aren't going to have the right to have 12 a contract, unless they enter into it after they get 13 married. So that is the first position of the Bar 14 Association with regard to your act, and we would 15 respectfully suggest that you allow the decisional law that 16 has developed over the decades to continue to be in effect, 17 and whether it's provident or not provident, to codify the 18 decisional law with regard to the standard, we have no 19 comment because that is the law as it exists today. So we 20 would recommend deleting paragraph B from your act.

21           If I may continue, your next provision is 22 3323(c)(i), bifurcation. There are those who will argue 23 that bifurcation is fraught with danger, there are those 24 who will argue that without bifurcation there's unfair
25 advantage. You know that the statute was put into effect

1 -- or the bifurcation provisions were put into statute at 2 the time that the statute was originally written and it was 3 a three-year separation period. It was an unduly long 4 separation period that, as Mr. Howett has pointed out, the 5 February 12, 1988, amendments had substantial revisions to 6 this statute. One of those revisions was the changing from 7 three years to two years.

8           Whether it makes sense to have bifurcation 9 anymore because we only have two years is subject to 10 debate, but the reality is that people do litigate cases 11 for long, long, long periods of time, and one thing that 12 seems to be of significance to certain people is am I 13 married or am I not? Do I want to get remarried or don't 14 I? Am I going to let that person get divorced, et cetera?
15 Bifurcation gives something, and that is divorce. And 16 therefore, leaving the PEF Code.

17           And what you have in paragraph (d.1) is a 18 provision that essentially says if a party dies during the 19 course of proceedings and there hasn't been a divorce 20 entered but there are grounds for divorce established, then 21 you can still follow through with a divorce action. And 22 for those of us who have tried divorce cases against dead 23 people, or we've been the dead party against live people, 24 it's an aberration. It's about a small, little, tiny 25 practice, and I would suggest that the aberrational cases

1 cause constituents to call their Senators and call their 2 Representatives, and they usually make more noise than any 3 constituent and therefore things somehow get to the 4 forefront.

5 But what is there is essentially saying that 6 whether you're divorced or not, in that tiny, tiny, tiny 7 percentage of cases, the bill as written should give the 8 same divorce rights, that is equitable distribution rights, 9 to the dead person or the parties. And you know that the 10 surviving spouse gets a statutory share under the PEF Code, 11 and you know that the surviving spouse could get more and 12 most likely will get more under the Divorce Code. And so 13 it would seem to me that the reason for writing the 14 provision the way it was written was to essentially say 15 there will be no abatement. Yes, we're going to have to 16 prove that there were grounds for divorce, and one would 17 assume that's irretrievable breakdown, and every case is 18 irretrievable breakdown if you filed for divorce, darn it, 19 and the two years goes out the window because the person is 20 dead, so it's a lifetime. But it's a rational way to deal 21 with cases that go on and on and on and on until they 22 finally die. And we've all been there, every lawyer in 23 this room has been there where we've said to a judge, but 24 the son of a gun is going to die on us, and we've had to 25 deal with that. Do we bifurcate or not? But whether or

1 not we bifurcate, and bifurcation can be improvident
2 because of the whole raft of things that could occur as a 3 result, whether we bifurcate or not, a party is entitled to 4 get the rights that the legislature has said they're 5 entitled to get. So you have made a rational decision in 6 writing your law by saying that the Divorce Code trumps the 7 PEF Code in this particular regard.

8 Now, there could always be the funny
9 aberrational case the day before the husband dies, the wife 10 files for divorce because she knows she's going to get more 11 under the Divorce Code than she would get under the PEF 12 Code, but that's a family fight and that is aberration.

13 With regard to whether or not the statute should 14 stay at two years rather than one year, our cases take a 15 while to resolve. Yes, 85 to 90 percent of the cases do 16 get settled ultimately. Only a few cases end up going on 17 for 5 to 10 years. One year seems to be awful fast, but at 18 some point somebody said two years seems to be awful fast.

19 Moving along to the provisions of page 7, and I 20 believe this is 3501(a.1), and that's the increase in 21 value. You've taken in writing the law a rational view of 22 what happens, and now we know post-March 2000 what really 23 can happen. We all thought our bank accounts and our stock 24 accounts and everything would continue to go up, and when 25 the law was written in 1980, we were still on a growth

1 curve. We never had, until '87 of course, and then but it
2 was too late, and the year 2000 these dramatic reductions 3 in our 401K plans, our defined contribution plans, and our 4 stock portfolios, and what the increase in value is is 5 essentially the only portion of nonmarital property, 6 premarital, gifted during marriage inherited property that 7 becomes a marital asset, that is the increase in value.
8 What happened if it increased, we separated in '99, it 9 increased and we tried the case in 2004 and it's down in 10 the soup somewhere? Well, this statute that you've written 11 essentially says, look, we'll take a rational look at this, 12 and if it went down, then we'll do it at the lower value.
13 Otherwise, you can have somebody in Erie County making a 14 different decision than in Montgomery County, which is 15 totally irrational, totally unfair when you have 16 essentially a mechanical view of valuation. This is a 17 mechanical statute, and the Supreme Court has reaffirmed 18 that it is.

19 Now, if it is a mechanical view, why are you 20 treating defined benefit retirement plans different than 21 all other assets? It doesn't make sense. Why did you 22 single out defined benefit retirement plans? I think it 23 was done for the same reason that in the past it's been 24 attempted to do with regard to alimony. You have a very 25 flexible statute. You have an equitable distribution

1 statute, and once we've determined equitable distribution, 2 however it's going to shake out, then we make a 3 determination of alimony and again it can shake out. And 4 my hands can't be recorded, but what I'm doing is the 5 balancing act, the judge's discretion, the master's 6 discretion as reviewed by the judge.

7 Now you have a statute of defined benefit 8 retirement plans, you've singled out an asset, not the 9 automobiles that I talked about, but the classic pensions.
10 For us, the U.S. Steel and Carnegie pension, the 11 Westinghouse pension, the classic time and salary related 12 pension. Then you take the pension and you create a 13 coverture fraction, and we all have battled with the 14 coverture fraction long prior to Berrington and 15 Katzenburger. And I know Berrington very, very well 16 because Attorney Patricia Miller in Pittsburgh tried the 17 case, and by the time that case came back from the Supreme 18 Court, she became a standing master for the Court of Common 19 Pleas of Allegheny County Family Division, and I sat in her 20 seat and I tried to figure out how to get Berrington
21 concluded because Westinghouse had changed their pension
22 plan 10 times since then, the law had changed, Westinghouse
23 even ridded themselves of their plan administration
24 department and it was in New Jersey, they never even heard 25 of Berrington, and then we began to realize something:

1 Your defined benefit plans are largely controlled by 2 Federal statute. Now, "you" is the wrong pronoun, because 3 we do have State plans, we have PSERS, we have Civil 4 Service, we have firemen and police, we have State Police.
5 That's controlled by State statute. Now, you haven't 6 differentiated with this particular statute, number one.

7 Number two is that you have in your writing come 8 up with a simplistic formula. Well, you got rid of that 9 simplistic formula for alimony, and you got rid of it for a 10 very real reason, and that is that you wanted judges to 11 exercise discretion to make a determination as to whether 12 or not it made any rational sense to have alimony, and if 13 so, how much and for how long, taking into account the 14 factors that you've set forth. But you imposed what I say 15 is back door alimony by doing some formula. And the 16 formula is patently unfair, the formula is a coverture 17 fraction that is so simplistic, so very, very simplistic, 18 that what it does is make it easy for lawyers, make it easy 19 for Masters and make it easy for judges and make it wrong 20 and make it unfair for all of the post-separation 21 enhancements that occur.

22 Now, it's not simple corn, it's pieces of the 23 corn, because corn isn't just a unit, it's got hundreds and 24 hundreds of the little kernels on it and we cut them off 25 for our parents and make sure they can eat as much as they

1 want, and that's what a judge can do. A judge can say I 2 can take a piece of the kernels, it isn't whether you get 3 the corn or not, I can take a piece of it, I can take 4 kernels of it, and I can allocate it to the marital side 5 and the nonmarital side, and then I can decide how much of 6 the marital to do. And if it turns out that the 7 nonmarital, the post-separation side is enormous, that is 8 the guy finally got rid of his wife, the woman finally got 9 rid of the guy and the kid, they all drove her crazy and 10 now she's working day and night, she has a pension, which 11 mind you is a dinosaur anyway, because they're not long for 12 this world, then she has a huge, huge increase because the 13 pension is based upon a final average salary and years in 14 service. Now, some of these pensions, by the way, are 15 subsidized. Lots of the union pensions that you're talking 16 about are subsidized, and what gets subsidized is different 17 components of it. But I would bet if I went around this 18 room not one of us would know that because we're not 19 experts.

20 And so you've essentially said we don't want 21 experts, we don't want valuation, we don't want actuarial 22 analysis, we don't want anything, we want to do a formula 23 because it's all beyond us, and the answer is it's not 24 beyond experts. We have experts in car cases, we have 25 experts in products cases, we have experts in that dirty

1 "M" word cases, we have experts all over, so why not in 2 this one particular area? We have experts for real estate,
3 why not for pensions? Because it's inscrutable. Once in a 4 while attorneys, masters, and judges have to do the hard 5 work.

6 Now, what is particularly troublesome to us is 7 the formula takes into account post-separation enhancements 8 except those made by monetary contributions of the 9 employee's spouse. There almost never is any. There's 10 never a contribution to a pension other than when you buy 11 because of past military service or you buy because there's 12 a window allowing you to buy. That's the only thing we're 13 talking about in that. The drafters have mixed the idea of 14 defined contribution and defined benefit when they wrote 15 that.

16 Number two with regard to it is it's only of the 17 spouse. So if the employer throws something in and says, 18 look, I'm going to enhance like crazy here, I'm going to 19 give you a supplemental benefit, I'm going to do whatever I 20 can to hold on to you or I'm going to do whatever I can to 21 get rid of you, and it happened all long after separation, 22 it seems to me that it's patently unfair to give some of 23 that to the nonemployed spouse. And if there is something 24 that looks like it's going to be unfair to the nonemployed 25 spouse, then we've got the alimony still out there that

1 hasn't been made into a formula, we have the equitable 2 distribution that hasn't been made into a formula, and 3 people can balance those things out.

4 Then you go on to the immediate offset method.
5 Instead of the deferred distribution method, you have the 6 immediate offset method. That's the method that's fraught 7 with danger because we're valuing based upon today's 8 interest rates something that somebody is not going to get 9 in futuro. Superficially, on the face of it, it looks like 10 using a coverture fraction makes some rational sense, but 11 it's also again unfair, because what you've done is the 12 denominator is the time up to trial. But what it is that's 13 going to be earned isn't going to be paid until age 65, so 14 we've got 5 years, 10 years, 15 years of things on our 15 minds that we've somehow taken care of with a formula.

16 Formulas don't work in divorce law just the same 17 as they don't work in marriage. Every single marriage and 18 every single divorce is different, and you invested in the 19 judges tremendous discretion in 1980 for equitable 20 distribution, and you stripped a little bit of the 21 discretion, or as I say you maximized the discretion when 22 you took away the rehabilitative threshold in 1988 for 23 alimony and you gave it all in the discretion. Why strip 24 the judges and masters of discretion at this point, and 25 then why take the post-separation earnings and throw them

1 in the pot when you don't for anything else, and then why 2 say, which is inscrutable to all of us, why say just the 3 employee spouse's contributions? What happened to the 4 employee who worked for a salary and the employer, as all 5 of us do, throw in extra money to our employees for 6 purposes of keeping them happy so they can continue to 7 work, that's not to be included. So you have two very 8 glaring unfairnesses in this particular provision, and it's 9 the position of the Allegheny County Bar Association that 10 there's no reason to treat this particular marital asset 11 differently than all other assets and we should leave it to 12 the court's own discretion.

13 While I'm on a roll, I might as well continue 14 on, and that is with regard to equitable distribution of 15 marital property, and that is Section 3502 and then the 16 addition of the tax and the market cost or sales cost 17 provisions. Understand, as Mr. Howett has so well stated, 18 that when Hovis came down, the Supreme Court just didn't 19 know anything about this February 12, 1988, amendment
20 because the decision was probably written before and it 21 came out in April. So that we have fought Hovis forever, 22 and there's no question that the Federal tax IRS 23 commissioner looks at valuation differently than 24 Pennsylvania looks at valuation, but I think that something 25 is pretty obvious, and that is that many of the masters and

1 judges know how to deal this and deal with it with the 2 proper discretion, and that is they match taxables against 3 taxables when they're divvying things up, and they match
4 nontaxables against nontaxables when they're divvying
5 things up, and they don't mix apples and oranges.

6           What you've essentially said is the court may 7 consider each marital asset or group of assets
8 independently and apply a different percentage to each 9 marital asset. And the factors which are relevant to that 10 are the following. You put the word "may" in, and the word 11 "may" is another discretion word. This is not "shall," 12 it's not that the judge must do that, but rather the judge 13 may take a look and utilize all of these factors or some of 14 the factors, but the judge has to go over the factors. And 15 one of the factors is the tax ramifications, which need not 16 be immediate and certain. But it doesn't say that 17 absolutely those tax consequences will be taken into 18 effect, because clearly some of the tax consequences are so 19 far distant and it's so difficult, and Hovis was a funny
20 case because in Hovis, he was the one that took the appeal, 21 and when he took the appeal, he was complaining he only got 22 15 percent Federal income tax reduction against a 23 particular pension asset, and in fact he wanted 20 or 25, 24 and the Supreme Court said, hey, we're not doing anything 25 at all. So there was one litigant who should never have

1 taken an appeal, and then we get stuck with this 2 aberrational case. But all this is saying is this is 3 something you may do, and you don't have to just totally 4 exclude it, you can still consider that somewhere down the 5 line there's going to be taxes or sales costs and expenses, 6 because clearly taxes and expenses or death are the things 7 of certainty in our lives anyway and we know it's going to 8 happen, but it's there.

9 Your partial distribution is a good statement,
10 because I practice in about a seven-county area, and all 11 the counties do differently, and there are certain counties 12 that say there are no partial distributions. So you get 13 the rich spouse with all the dollars and the nonemployed 14 spouse or the unemployed spouse, the one with all the kids 15 who have no control, has no money and can't get any money 16 and has no opportunity, unless has a crazy person for an 17 attorney who's willing to hang on until the end of the 18 case, which normally doesn't happen.

19 Then I wanted to -- no, I think I want to stop.
20 Do you have any questions? That was with one breath.

21 (Laughter.)

22 SUBCOMMITTEE CHAIRMAN BROWNE: Thank you very 23 much.

24 We have a question from Representative Harper.

25 REPRESENTATIVE HARPER: Thank you for your

1 testimony. I particularly appreciated the comments on the 2 defined benefit plan section. But my question relates to 3 prenuptial agreements, because your testimony was slightly 4 different than Mr. Howett's. Here's my question: If we 5 enact the bill as written, would we be imposing an 6 affirmative obligation to provide full and fair disclosure 7 in prenuptial agreements?

8 MR. POLLOCK: The act, if you ignore the 60-day, 9 we're ignoring 60-day for this discussion, we have that 10 obligation already. You're not imposing it, it already is.
11 You're just codifying the case law as written to assure 12 that this is the case law.

13 REPRESENTATIVE HARPER: Let me just stop you
14 there for one second, because I thought that Pennsylvania 15 law in this regard treated prenuptial agreements the same 16 as any other contract, and in any other contract, persons 17 of equal bargaining ability or persons who are not under 18 the influence of the other could waive certain things.
19 They could say, for example, each party has made full and 20 fair disclosure of the assets by the schedules attached 21 hereto as exhibits A and B, or has waived the right to do 22 so.

23 MR. POLLOCK: That's correct.

24 REPRESENTATIVE HARPER: Okay. So are we now 25 imposing an affirmative obligation, or is it your view of

1 Pennsylvania law that presently in order to be valid, every 2 single prenup has to have full and fair disclosure?

3 MR. POLLOCK: No, that's not what your statute
4 says. What your statute and the existing law says is that 5 to be valid you must have full and fair disclosure or you 6 must voluntary and expressly waive in writing any right to 7 full and fair disclosure, or that you had adequate
8 knowledge. So we try cases, and there was no exhibits 9 attached, there was no exclusion as it says in the case 10 law, but he did her taxes for five years prior to marriage, 11 he knew everything about it, so who was he to say that he 12 didn't know, that he didn't have a full and fair 13 disclosure?

14 So it's a funny way to write the statute, but 15 what the statute is essentially saying is that to overcome, 16 this is a negative way to write, but it's clear, and that 17 is to overcome an existing contract, you have to show clear 18 and convincing something or other, and that clear and 19 convincing something or other you have to show is all of 20 those things, because if you miss one of them and it pops 21 up, then of course the agreement's okay. If we put in that 22 we waive or that we got to see it and we don't attach it or 23 we do attach it or that we knew everything. So it's a kind 24 of a funny way to write it, but it doesn't change the case 25 law at all.

1           Now, your real question is why are we doing to 2 prenuptial agreements this fair and reasonable disclosure
3 thing?

4           REPRESENTATIVE HARPER: Right.

5           MR. POLLOCK: And the answer is that that was 6 the Supreme Court's essentially, I mean, you got to read 7 the case over and over and over again, which we all do 8 because we have nothing else to do, and so essentially what 9 Simeone is saying is that this is how we view fraud in a 10 contractual relationship between prospective spouses. This 11 is like a subset of fraud in my mind. Whether that's the 12 proper interpretation of Simeone, it seems to be the 13 reading of Simeone, and that is that if you and I contract 14 with regard to this and I don't tell you that it's 15 nonpotable water, you can get your money back for this 16 bottle of water because I committed fraud. I mean, I knew 17 that it was nonpotable. And so we've done a subset of that 18 fraud, and that is we've essentially said, look, if you 19 knew you were sitting on material assets or material 20 liabilities and they were nondisclosed, then that's fraud.

21           REPRESENTATIVE HARPER: Right, I agree with 22 that, and I think that you're right based on the way it's 23 written, and I wanted to make sure that you felt that we 24 weren't imposing an affirmative obligation on people--

25           MR. POLLOCK: No, I'm--

1 REPRESENTATIVE HARPER: Hold on for a second.

2 MR. POLLOCK: I'm sorry.

3 REPRESENTATIVE HARPER: Because the court has 4 the ability to discern fraud in a specific case. The 5 legislature paints everything we do with a broad brush.
6 Either everybody does everything we write down or nobody 7 does it. So by taking it out of the realm where the court 8 says, is this contract like every other contract in 9 Pennsylvania, and applies contractual law to it. And 10 putting it in a statute, I mean, I think we have to know 11 we're making a change in the law or not, but it's your view 12 that we're not.

13 MR. POLLOCK: My view is we're not. I'm not 14 making a value judgment on why we would codify the existing 15 law. I mean, you have very real reason to throw in as many 16 factors as possible in equitable distribution and alimony 17 and not make them controlling and say that there could be 18 many, many other things, but essentially because that's a 19 way to have some consistency statewide. On the other hand, 20 to absolutely say this is how these particular contracts 21 are supposed to be done, I'm not making any value judgment 22 on whether that's--

23 REPRESENTATIVE HARPER: Or whether it should be 24 here or not.

25 MR. POLLOCK: Right.

1           REPRESENTATIVE HARPER: Okay. And to make it
2 clear that both of us are speaking this way for the record, 3 we're not talking about the 60-day requirement, which would 4 be a brand new requirement under Pennsylvania law.

5           MR. POLLOCK: Yes. And the Bar Association
6 clearly is against the 60-day requirement, but it made no 7 value judgment as to whether or not the legislature should 8 be recodified in case law as the enforceability of 9 contracts.

10           REPRESENTATIVE HARPER: Thank you.

11           Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

12           SUBCOMMITTEE CHAIRMAN BROWNE: Thank you.

13           Representative Manderino.

14           REPRESENTATIVE MANDERINO: Thank you.

15           Let me start, I guess, with the discussion that 16 just left off, because either I didn't understand all of 17 the dialogue or it really didn't answer the concern that I 18 had. I heard and understood your testimony with regard to 19 the 60-day unenforceability clause, for lack of a better
20 word. What I didn't understand clearly from your testimony 21 or the last dialogue was if that 60-day provision isn't 22 there, what is existing decisional law with regard to 23 agreements signed if the receiving party wants to claim 24 duress in the contract? What is the existing law? Because 25 if not, Roman numeral (i), (ii), (iii) don't address the

1 issue of duress at all, and you said take 60 days out,
2 leave it to decisional law, but nobody said what decisional 3 law does with regard to duress, and my understanding of the 4 reason that 60 days was being proposed was to deal with 5 what seemed to be some nebulous standard about whether or 6 not I was under duress.

7 MR. POLLOCK: Okay, it is not duress. The 8 decisional law with regard to duress is actual physical 9 constraint. Economic duress is not deemed to be duress to 10 void a prenuptial or post-nuptial agreement. So although 11 it's stress and emotion, its not duress.

12 REPRESENTATIVE MANDERINO: Okay, so if I am of 13 the mindset that signing a contract under emotional 14 distress ought not to be considered, I want to get rid of 15 the 60 days; if I think it ought to be considered, I want 16 to keep the 60 days, or something similar.

17 MR. POLLOCK: It sounds like that, except that I
18 think both sides have the emotional stress. I have a 19 25-year-old and a 21-year-old and we talk about marriage 20 all the time and we talk about the rationality of marriage, 21 and having been married now for 33 years, and pray that I 22 continue to be married, how I think of marriage today and 23 how I think of it during those 60 days prior to marriage
24 I'm sure are two different things. We're all under stress, 25 we all have different tugs and pulls, and the well-heeled

1 spouse, the industrial magnate who is marrying the night
2 cleaning lady for a second marriage and he wants to wipe 3 her out of equitable distribution, spousal support, APL and 4 alimony, counsel fees, costs and expenses, sounds like some 5 power thing. But he wants to marry her, but he'll marry
6 her on one condition. Well, I'll bet there's more than one 7 condition. She wants to marry him at all costs, she's 8 pregnant. So she has this overriding need to marry him.
9 That's just not true. That's human nature. People do 10 things.

11 REPRESENTATIVE MANDERINO: Okay, so current 12 decisional law doesn't recognize a defense or a -- 13 "defense" isn't the right word, what's the word I'm looking 14 for, a reason to break the contract to be one of emotional 15 duress?

16 MR. POLLOCK: No.

17 REPRESENTATIVE MANDERINO: Okay.

18 MR. POLLOCK: No, but emotional instability.
19 Maybe you could go to that clear and convincing standard 20 that somebody was non compos mentis. We have annulments, 21 you know, but very, very few.

22 REPRESENTATIVE MANDERINO: On the issue of the 23 formulary with regard to distribution of pension plans, and 24 again, I understood what it was you said, but then you said 25 several times to put this simplistic formula is unfair, and

1 you never finished by saying unfair to whom. Is there 2 always an unfair to the -- is it that it ends up being 3 unfair to the earning party whose pension the name is in?
4 Is it unfair to the nonearning person who it wasn't their 5 pension, or if it's not one side or the other, explain who 6 it's unfair to?

7 MR. POLLOCK: I mean, theoretically it could be 8 unfair both ways, that is that we've had salary cutbacks, 9 et cetera, et cetera, et cetera, or we've had some really 10 aberrational things go on with regard to pensions. LTV
11 Steel is the prime example. But we all know what I'm 12 really saying, and that is the unfairness is the 13 post-separation activity that could be because our cases do 14 go on longer than two years. They go on for 5 and 10 15 years, not because the lawyers want it to happen, believe 16 me, but rather because some clients can't get there, or 17 they allow it just to happen because they just don't want 18 to get to equitable distribution.

19 In that 5- or 10-year period of time, all kinds 20 of stuff happens, not the least of which is that the 21 employed spouse has redoubled his or her efforts in terms 22 of the career track. And paid alimony pendente lite, or 23 had lessened APL throughout that period of time and may be 24 paying alimony, but by hitting him again on equitable 25 distribution by saying we're going to take a chunk of your

1 post-separation earned income is patently unfair because 2 when one works, one works for a package, one works for a 3 salary, one works for deferred compensation, pension, 4 supplemental pension, disability, life insurance the whole
5 shooting match. And there are those who work for modest 6 incomes knowing they're going to have good pensions and 7 stay on and on and on and on because the pension is what 8 they're earning. It's a balance from an employer 9 viewpoint, and I'll tell you, U.S. Steel and Carnegie, the 10 pension plan is a dinosaur. When those skilled workers are 11 gone, this whole concept is going to be gone.

12 All I'm suggesting is don't put a Band-Aid on it 13 because you're hurting very clearly the spouse who has 14 significant post-separation earnings. And we all want to 15 take care of the dependent spouse who raised all the 16 children, and there are two ways to do it under your 17 statute. You don't have to do it again. One, equitable 18 distribution, do something fair for that person. Two, 19 alimony. And you've, fortunately, avoided this formula 20 thing that made no rational sense, and so you allow alimony 21 to fill in that gap. And as that person continues to work, 22 you're saying we allow his or her income to be carved away 23 and given to the nonworking spouse or the dependent spouse 24 or lesser employed spouse throughout a particular period of 25 time. And then this statute says, you know what, we'll do

1 some simple formula, we'll take another piece of the same
2 thing. It ain't fair.

3 REPRESENTATIVE MANDERINO: How do you address
4 what I would think would be the counterargument to that is, 5 well, the formula by its very nature also takes that into 6 account because if they let the post-separation 7 distribution drag on for 10 years and they were only 8 married for 3 years, there still is only, built in by way 9 of the formula, 3/13 of pension.

10 MR. POLLOCK: Right. It sounds good, it sounds 11 easy, but it's inexact, it's inaccurate, and I'm not saying 12 this from a I've-got-to-have-it-right-down-to-the-penny 13 sort of thing. We don't know why this is being applied to 14 the U.S. Steel and Carnegie pension or the union pension.
15 They're not the same, or the State Police pension. Because 16 remember, vested or unvested, we still apply a coverture
17 fraction. Or the firemen or the municipal or the PSERS.
18 You're applying it all across the board, when in fact,
19 there's multiple components to these people's pensions.
20 And to do it without having appropriate actuarial and/or 21 expert input does clearly cause an unfair, and I can't tell 22 you if it's unfair one way or the other, because this is a 23 matter of running the numbers, but you run the numbers
24 based upon the individual facts and the individual 25 pensions.

1           So what has been proposed here is an 2 across-the-board formula that's supposed to apply to 3 everybody when in fact all it is is just an easy way out of 4 a very difficult intellectual area, and I'm not 5 intellectually capable of getting on the stand and 6 testifying as to valuation or what's marital and what's 7 nonmarital, but boy, I hire experts to do that.

8           REPRESENTATIVE MANDERINO: Which brings me to my 9 last point. Let's bring this down to the real world. I'm 10 making up these numbers, but my gut reaction tells me that 11 at least in theory they're probably not off. Ninety 12 percent of the Joes and Josephines going through this are 13 average wage and salary earners for whom their one sole 14 house and the potential pension benefits are their only 15 assets, if they even end up into the plus column as 16 compared to the minus column by the time you do the net 17 assets of the family, and only 10 percent of the people are 18 in the other category where you're talking about big 19 dollars. Now, I'm Joe and Josephine, 90 percent of the 20 average, where I can barely afford to get divorced let 21 alone the costs of divorce. Why should we not make a 22 general rule that could potentially reduce substantially 23 the costs of the litigation of the marital distribution, 24 the property distribution?

25           MR. POLLOCK: Those 90 percent of the cases do

1 settle, and they do settle with coverture fractions because 2 they are the house, car, and pension case. That's what we 3 call them. And before the Divorce Code you well recall
4 that there was a trade-off. You know, I want to drive off 5 into the sunset, have my girlfriend, and you can have the 6 house. Okay? Because we had no -- 90 percent of the cases 7 or 95 percent of the cases, or even 99 percent of the 8 cases, are the house, car, and pension cases, and they all 9 settle ultimately. Yes, they battle over the kids, and 10 there's nothing you can do about that, that's just human 11 nature. Yes, they battle over is my earning capacity or my 12 earnings or should I go back to work or not go back to 13 work, and there's nothing you can do about that. And you 14 have excellent systems statewide to do this with a 15 statewide computer to enforce it. But what you're talking 16 about with a myriad of these things is that tiny, tiny 17 little percentage. So 90 percent of it is okay anyway, or 18 I think you're being conservative. I think 95 percent of 19 these cases are house, car, and pension, and they all 20 settle. They all settle because no one can afford 21 emotionally or financially to go through this aggravation.

22 But there are the few that you're talking about 23 hundreds and hundreds of thousands of dollars that you will 24 strip from people with these formulary, as you call them, 25 or formula, that I call them. And without any rationale,

1 without any input, you're just wiping out an entire either
2 actuarial or expert science. There's a whole industry out
3 there of bean counters involved in this area. Heaven knows 4 that's their world, but they're the ones that created these 5 animals. And to say that the firemen's pension is the same
6 as U.S. Steel and Carnegie pension doesn't make any sense
7 to me. And then the union pension that is subsidized 8 substantially or heavily weighted or not heavily weighted 9 to the surviving spouse, it doesn't make sense to then have 10 one formula across the board for that, because you didn't 11 do that for the car and you didn't do that for the house.

12           You start going down the slippery slope, as we 13 say, of creating specific ways to value specific property, 14 you might as well do it all and you might as well give up 15 being a legislature and go into the judiciary. That's why 16 you said I will leave to the judiciary or we will leave to 17 the judiciary valuation, we will leave to the judiciary how 18 we split up the valuations, and then what to do once we 19 split them up with regard to alimony. Why do it for one 20 particular asset? And I defy anyone in this room to tell 21 me that they're that experienced and knowledgeable and 22 educated to tell us how this financially works out the same 23 way for all the pensions. And then why is it that you have 24 employee contributions only and not employer when I worked 25 for an employer, I worked for a whole myriad of things and

1 not just my salary. I worked for lots of things.

2 SUBCOMMITTEE CHAIRMAN BROWNE: Thank you.

3 Representative Hennessey.

4 REPRESENTATIVE HENNESSEY: Thank you, Mr.

5 Chairman.

6 Thank you, Mr. Pollock, for your testimony. A 7 question from one of the prior Representatives, I guess
8 Kathy, referred to page 2 on line 12. The question that I 9 have involves the word "voluntarily." I thought that in 10 today's society voluntarily had a concept with nonduress, 11 almost intrinsically woven into the fabric of the term. I 12 ran into a dinosaur of a judge a few years ago who said, if 13 you didn't have a gun to his head, then it was voluntary, 14 period, end of discussion, and threw us out. When the 15 question was asked, it just seemed to me, you know, brought 16 up a whole lot of rather unpleasant memories, and I'm 17 wondering if we shouldn't simply say the party didn't 18 execute the agreement voluntarily and it was not the 19 probable result of duress. So that some, I mean, there may 20 be, with my due respect to the members of the bench who are 21 here, but there may still be some dinosaurs out there who 22 actually think that duress voluntariness today does involve 23 the concept of not having a gun to your head. I don't 24 think it would hurt, I think it probably would make sure 25 that we don't, when we address that issue, not leave

1 parties to argue over what that term means by simply saying 2 it involves a more modern concept than the one that was 3 applied against my client at the time.

4 MR. POLLOCK: Well, the gun to my head is close
5 to my analogy of physical constraint. That's what duress 6 is. We had to spell it out one time in one of our cases to 7 try to explain, look, I understand you shelled out $40,000 8 or $50,000 for all the wedding arrangements and you spent 9 $10,000 on a dress and you've done this and you've done 10 that and you would have been terribly embarrassed with your 11 family and his family and your friends, but that's only 12 money. That's not somebody physically restraining you, or 13 as this judge said, a gun to that person's head. It's only 14 money. And so that's what we're talking about really is 15 only money at that point.

16 It's the down the line, the 10 to 20 to 30 years
17 down the line where those aberrational cases of Dr. Simeone 18 occur where she got $25,000 in alimony over a two-year
19 period of time and he was a neurosurgeon or general 20 surgeon. Didn't seem to be fair, but that was our law. If 21 this is our law, one would ask why are we singling out one 22 thing or another? I think the codifiers did a superb job 23 in isolating all the components of Pennsylvania case law as 24 it sits, at least at 3106(a). To say voluntarily or not is 25 unnecessary because that's our law. It's a judge's

1 discretion as to whether or not a gun to the head is the 2 only component of nonvoluntariness. I would suggest to 3 you, just because these people would be embarrassed before 4 their hundreds of friends or parishioners doesn't make it
5 involuntary. Because we all have decisions like this all 6 the time. People break off engagements all the time, 7 pregnant or not, people break off engagements.

8 I don't think it's necessary to say voluntary 9 or not, but if voluntary is there, it's going to be 10 interpreted by judges. And one judge in Allegheny County 11 will have one view and another judge will have another 12 view, and the Superior Court may have a third view, and the 13 Supreme Court will have a fourth view. You put it in, the 14 courts will interpret it, and they will meld it and mold it 15 over time, and hopefully that judge 15 years ago isn't 16 sitting on the bench right now, but on the other hand, if 17 voluntary is the opposite of duress, then maybe he was 18 close to right at the time. It didn't seem kind of nice to 19 me, he didn't give you any other alternative other than 20 voluntary, and so the drafters seem to be saying here are 21 all the components.

22 I didn't answer your question.

23 REPRESENTATIVE HENNESSEY: I don't know, you
24 might have. You might have answered it three or four 25 times. But what I'm trying to get at is should we enhance

1 the word "voluntary"? Should we define it elsewhere in the 2 bill by amending the bill, or should we add a component 3 that says voluntarily and not the product of duress?

4 MR. POLLOCK: But then you'd have to define 5 duress or not define duress.

6 REPRESENTATIVE HENNESSEY: Well, the benefit I
7 would see, it would take us into the modern era as opposed 8 to the old west where we say that voluntary was absence of 9 a gun to your head.

10 MR. POLLOCK: I think that they're both sides of 11 the same coin, and I don't know if one would do harm, but I
12 wasn't one of the drafters for the Senate on the bill, so I 13 can't say with absolute certainty it wouldn't do harm, but 14 I can't see how it would do any harm because in fact you 15 still leave to a judge to make a determination of what's 16 voluntary and what's duress, and you have limited slightly, 17 maybe, what it means to be involuntary, maybe. Or maybe 18 it's two sides of the same coin.

19 REPRESENTATIVE HENNESSEY: I don't know what the 20 Senate drafters intended, but I think I've already got my 21 amendment prepared to make sure we don't go back to the 22 wild west.

23 MR. POLLOCK: Well, you're not going to do any 24 harm by doing it, I think. That's my personal opinion.

25 REPRESENTATIVE HENNESSEY: Thanks.

1           SUBCOMMITTEE CHAIRMAN BROWNE: Thank you,
2 Attorney Pollock, for your testimony. Appreciate it.

3           MR. POLLOCK: Thank you for the opportunity to 4 appear before you.

5           SUBCOMMITTEE CHAIRMAN BROWNE: Thank you.

6           Next we will have a panel of the Advisory 7 Committee on Domestic Relations Law of the Joint State
8 Government Commission, the Honorable Emanuel Bertin, Court
9 of Common Pleas. Judge Bertin and Mr. Howett, Attorney 10 Howett is back with us. Attorney Albert Momjian, is that 11 correct, and Frederick Frank.

12           Thank you very much for participating with us
13 today. You may start when you're ready.

14           JUDGE BERTIN: Thank you, good afternoon. My 15 name is Judge Emanuel Bertin, and I am a judge with the 16 Court of Common Pleas of Montgomery County. It's an honor 17 for me to be here today to make some opening remarks about 18 the work of the Joint State Government Commission Advisory 19 Committee on Domestic Relations Law, a committee which I'm 20 privileged to chair.

21           From a historic perspective, the advisory 22 committee was formed pursuant to 1993 Senate Resolution 43, 23 Printer's No. 1673. And Senate Resolution 43 directed the 24 commission to undertake a study of Domestic Relations Law, 25 but excluded the subjects of child abuse and adoption.

1 Senate Resolution 43 also created a task force comprised of 2 the Majority and Minority Chairs of the Senate and House 3 Judiciary Committees, and the Senate and House Aging and 4 Youth Committees.

5 At the outset, I wish to extend my appreciation
6 to the task force for constituting such a wonderful
7 committee for me to chair. The committee of 27
8 individuals, 11 women and 16 men, was highly credentialed, 9 diverse, and dedicated. The members have had extensive 10 experience in family law, many of whom held leadership 11 positions such as State and county Bar presidents, chairs 12 of Family Law sections of the PBA, the American Academy of 13 Matrimonial Lawyers, the American Bar Association, and they 14 have written and lectured extensively in the area of family 15 law and have been active in dealing with prior revisions of 16 the code, initially the 1980 code and then the '88
17 amendments. These individuals have represented both 18 husbands and wives regularly so that they have brought a 19 balanced approach to the issues at hand. A broad 20 perspective of disciplines was present on the committee
21 through the diversity of the various family lawyers, family 22 court masters, trial judges, an appellate court judge, a 23 law professor, and a legal aid attorney.

24 The advisory committee decided to begin its 25 review of Domestic Relations Law with a reconsideration of

1 the Divorce Code, and it formed three subcommittees,
2 consistent with the statutory structure of the Divorce
3 Code. One, the Dissolution of the Marriage Subcommittee,
4 that's basically divorce, and the chair of that is Fred 5 Frank, who is sitting to my extreme right. Second, 6 Property Rights Subcommittee Chair, Jack Howett, who is to 7 my left, and Alimony Subcommittee Chair Ann Begler from 8 Pittsburgh, who is not present today with respect to the 9 alimony portion of our work.

10 It then formed a liaison committee co-chaired by 11 Albert Momjian, who is to my immediate right, and Leonard 12 Dugan, with the Joint State Government Commission Advisory 13 Committee on Decedents Estate Law.

14 And here is how our process worked. The 15 subcommittees and the liaison committee met in Pittsburgh, 16 Harrisburg, and Philadelphia many times and brought to the 17 full advisory committee recommendations which would be 18 studied in advance by the full advisory committee and then 19 debated before the full advisory committee at our meetings 20 in Hershey. That's where the full advisory committee met, 21 in Hershey. Nine such full advisory committees were held 22 in Hershey, which followed the numerous prior subcommittee 23 meetings with the smaller group. At the conclusion of the 24 subcommittee meetings and the nine full advisory committee 25 meetings, a consensus was reached and reflected in the 1 April 1999 report of the advisory committee. Senate Bill

2 95 incorporates the recommendations of the committee 3 contained in this April 1999 report except for the 4 committee's recommendation relating to alimony and the 5 committee's recommendation for a one-year separation period 6 as a ground for divorce.

7 Therefore, the proposed amendments as they 8 presently stand in Senate Bill 95 would be as follows:
9 One, to clarify the definition of separate and apart; 10 secondly, to establish statutory rules regarding the 11 enforceability of premarital agreements; thirdly, provide 12 that any premarital agreement executed within 60 days of 13 the marriage would be void; fourth, to amend the provisions 14 concerning bifurcation of divorce by rejecting automatic 15 bifurcation, providing for bifurcation with consent of both 16 parties, and permitting bifurcation only under limited 17 circumstances in the absence of consent.

18 Next, to provide that under certain 19 circumstances the divorce action does not abate upon the 20 death of a party, and the party's economic rights and 21 obligations are determined under equitable distribution 22 principles, not under the elective share provisions of the 23 Probate Code.

24 Further, to clarify how and when to measure and 25 determine the increase in value of nonmarital property.

1 Next, to insure that only the net increases in the value of 2 a party's nonmarital property is considered part of the 3 marital estate. Next, which you've been discussing,
4 reverse Berrington, adopt a coverture fraction methodology
5 along the lines of the Hovis case, and include all 6 post-separation enhancements except for the post-separation
7 monetary contributions by the employee spouse in the value 8 of a defined benefit plan. Next, clarify statutory law to 9 specifically authorize courts to consider each marital 10 asset independently in equitable distribution, and in 11 appropriate cases to apply a different percentage to each 12 marital asset.

13 Next, to clarify the tax ramifications need not 14 be immediate and certain to be considered in making an 15 equitable distribution award. Next, to provide that the 16 expense of sale, transfer, or liquidation associated with a 17 particular asset may be considered in making an equitable 18 distribution award. And lastly, to authorize interim 19 equitable distribution awards, and a minor matter, to raise 20 the amount from $500 to a thousand as the threshold for 21 when a party may petition the court for the creation of a 22 constructive trust for undisclosed assets.

23 As I stated earlier, we created a subcommittee 24 on alimony and did include a revised chapter on alimony in 25 our April 1999 report. Generally speaking, the 1 recommendation proposed a revision of the rules regarding 2 alimony to provide more certainty and predictability 3 through presumptive guidelines for the amount and for the 4 duration of alimony. While the alimony recommendation is 5 not part of Senate Bill 95, we stand ready as an advisory 6 committee to assist the legislature on addressing the 7 issues related to alimony.

8 In November of 1999, the advisory committee
9 issued its a second report. This report made
10 recommendations regarding Pennsylvania custody law. Maria 11 Cagnetti chaired that custody subcommittee. These 12 recommendations are incorporated into Senate Bill 275, 13 Printer's No. 465. We wholeheartedly feel that these 14 recommendations are in the best interests of the children 15 of Pennsylvania.

16 As to the presently proposed Divorce Code 17 legislation, our committee felt we had an opportunity to 18 write a report on divorce law that would fairly and 19 sensitively meet the needs of the households of thousands 20 of citizens throughout the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania for 21 years to come. We realize that we were entrusted with a 22 heavy responsibility, and we welcome the opportunity to 23 serve. We wanted this legislation not to give mere lip 24 service to, quote, achieve an economic justice, but to 25 embody it.

1 I've been pleased to serve as chair of the 2 advisory committee, and at this time it brings me great 3 pleasure to introduce three distinguished members of our 4 advisory committee, Jack Howett from Dauphin County, Al 5 Momjian from Philadelphia County, and Fred Frank from 6 Allegheny County, and they will present testimony regarding 7 the specific provisions of Senate Bill 95 and will answer 8 questions that you might have.

9 I want to thank you very much for this 10 opportunity. I am unaccustomed to reading my canned 11 testimony, so if my cadence was in any way boring, I 12 apologize. But with that, and perhaps with a more fluid 13 presentation, or is yours canned as well?

14 MR. HOWETT: No.

15 JUDGE BERTIN: Can we start with Jack Howett, 16 because he had the bulk of this matter with respect to the 17 ED, and I know you've heard from him before. I came in at 18 a time where I saw the tail end of his testimony.

19 SUBCOMMITTEE CHAIRMAN BROWNE: Sure.

20 JUDGE BERTIN: Okay, thank you.

21 And I just want to acknowledge a Montgomery 22 County Representative.

23 REPRESENTATIVE HARPER: I'm trying to think of a 24 question, because usually you get to ask me questions.

25 JUDGE BERTIN: It feels a little awkward on this

1 side.

2 MR. HOWETT: Mr. Chairman, members of the 3 committee, I will try and move through my testimony rather 4 quickly, and I'm going to follow the format of the report 5 that was prepared in 1999, and I know all of you have 6 available to you. And I'm going to broad brush some of the 7 things that I think are particularly noncontroversial, but 8 I want to mention them anyway.

9 The first is as to how and when to measure and 10 determine the increase in value of nonmarital property, and 11 this section simply codifies a case called Litmans, which 12 says that in nonmarital property, we're talking about 13 property that is inherited property, property that you 14 owned before the date of marriage, property that was gifted 15 to you alone and not transferred into joint names, these 16 are the things that have traditionally been and are under 17 Pennsylvania law separate property, nonmarital property, 18 that in valuing those things, this section says that you 19 value them at the time of separation or the time of closest 20 to trial, which is going to be sometime after separation, 21 whichever produces the lowest value. So that if it's your 22 separate property, the other party can't say, well, we're 23 going to pick the higher value time and include that 24 increase, that increase in value, because the increase in 25 value of separate property is marital property under

1 Pennsylvania law, and we're not proposing that that be 2 changed. That's been the way it is since 1980. It's just 3 a question of when do you determine what that increase is, 4 and this just says you would determine it at the point of 5 separation, or the point of trial, whichever is lower. And 6 it makes common sense to do that.

7 The next point is to ensure that the net
8 increase in value of a party's nonmarital property is part 9 of the marital estate. If you own two assets when you come 10 into the marriage and they're two different stocks, AT&T 11 and IT&T, and they're both worth $50, and the AT&T goes to 12 $100, and the IT&T goes to zero, you have a package, a 13 bundle of rights, that's still worth 100 bucks. It hasn't 14 gone up in value as far as your portfolio of rights. But 15 there have been some decisions and some masters that say, 16 well, we've got a $50 increase in AT&T, that's marital. We 17 have no increase in the IT&T, therefore there's no increase 18 there, so we're going to add 50 bucks to the marital pot.
19 It makes no sense, and I think that it's sort of logical 20 and intuitive to say that it was your intent when you first 21 adopted this in 1980 to say that the increase in value is 22 the whole bundle of rights that one comes into the marriage 23 with. All this does is codify the Litmans case that so 24 held and seems to make rather rational sense.

25 The Berrington and Holland issue I'm going to 1 defer for just a moment, because I want to try and go 2 through these simplistic things and I want to come back to 3 a couple points that you raised, Representative Manderino.

4 We want to clarify that in Section 3502(a) that the courts 5 may consider each asset independently. They don't have to 6 decide each asset independently, they don't have to say 7 that you get 50 percent of the car, you get 52 percent of 8 the house, you get 56 percent of the pension, you get 40
9 percent of the shore house. You can bundle things together 10 or you can say I'm going to treat everything together, but 11 it gives the court the authority to say that, for example, 12 in a defined benefit plan that has gone on for a long 13 period of time, to say that, well, the independent spouse 14 here really worked pretty hard in the vineyards for this 15 five or six years after separation, and we're going to give 16 that spouse 60 percent of the pension and only 40 percent 17 to the dependent spouse, whereas we're giving 50/50 on 18 everything else. It allows the judge the discretion to do 19 that in an appropriate case.

20 As to the tax ramifications, I think we've 21 pretty much covered that. The tax ramifications and the 22 cost of sale, if there are any questions, I'll be happy to 23 try and field those afterwards, but I think we covered it 24 in my earlier questions and I think it's been adequately 25 discussed today. And this goes to both the costs of sale

1 as well as tax ramifications.

2 We want to, in Section 3502(f), establish that 3 the court clearly has the authority to make interim 4 distributions of marital property. There have been some 5 courts and some masters that have said, we don't have the 6 authority to make an interim distribution. Let's say 7 there's a $100,000 account or a $5,000 account, it doesn't 8 matter, and I realize that as Representative Manderino 9 said, 90 percent of these cases are small cases. A lot of 10 the cases that perhaps some of those of us testifying today 11 tend to have somewhat larger cases because we're more 12 experienced, we're older, we've been around longer, doesn't 13 mean that most of the cases in this Commonwealth aren't the 14 mom and pop cases that are very simple, often with no 15 assets, and when there are assets, they're the house and 16 the pension cases. But even in those cases, there is often 17 the need for an advance distribution to the dependent 18 spouse. Let's say because everything is titled in 19 husband's name, is it fair that just because it's titled in 20 his name, it's clearly marital property, that there 21 shouldn't be some advance distribution, even a small 22 amount, during the course of the case so that the dependent 23 spouse has the ability to carry on the case? This clearly 24 gives the court the discretion to do that. It says that 25 the authority is there. You don't have to do it, but the 1 authority is there to do it.

2 Now, I want to come back now to the issue of 3 Berrington, Katzenburger, and these defined benefit plans, 4 and I'll try and do it briefly, because I know that we've 5 sort of been around this pretty much today as well.
6 Representative Manderino, you mentioned that 90 percent of 7 the cases aren't going to be able to afford experts, and 8 you are spot-on right. And Mr. Pollock said that 90 9 percent of the cases settle, and I would say probably at 10 least 90 percent of the cases settle, but that doesn't give 11 any justification for the law to be unfair. Now, it's 12 whose ox is being gored here, I guess. Mr. Pollock says 13 it's unfair one way, we're saying it's unfair unless the 14 legislature changes it back to the Holland case and goes 15 back to the coverture fraction methodology.

16 The fact is that even though 90 percent of the 17 cases settle, they settle on the basis of what the law is.
18 You settle a case knowing that if you can't settle it, 19 you're going to have to litigate it. Well, why litigate it 20 if the law is against you? Right now, the law is against 21 the dependent spouses in these pension cases. And again, 22 as you pointed out, Representative Manderino, if a case 23 does run 5 or 10 years, and there are cases that do, but 24 they're certainly the rare ones, those cases will be 25 corrected by the use of the coverture fraction. You'll

1 have 3/13 instead of 25/30. All we're doing by this 2 legislation is defining what is marital property. And that 3 is your job. That is the legislature's job, and that's 4 what the legislature has done throughout the Divorce Code,
5 to define what is marital property. You're not taking away 6 the discretion of the court to deal with who gets what 7 portion of that marital property. That is not being 8 removed.

9 So I submit to you that really what is fair here 10 is not to exclude a big chunk of that which is marital 11 property by continuing to use the Berrington, Katzenburger 12 analogy. And so the Joint State Government Commission, 13 your body that we constituted by doing this work over the 14 years and so forth, is recommending to you that you reverse
15 Berrington, Katzenburger and basically adopt the Holland 16 approach, the coverture fraction approach.

17 Mr. Momjian will speak to you primarily about 18 the premarital agreements, and Mr. Frank about some of the 19 aspect of the Divorce Code itself as far as the actual 20 implementation of getting a divorce decree, and I will 21 certainly stand for questions now or at the conclusion of 22 Mr. Momjian's and Mr. Frank's testimony.

23 MR. MOMJIAN: Does the committee have any 24 questions of Mr. Howett?

25 SUBCOMMITTEE CHAIRMAN BROWNE: It's probably

1 preferable that we do all the testimony first.

2 MR. MOMJIAN: I appreciate the opportunity,
3 members of the committee, of appearing also to talk
4 exclusively on Section 3106 dealing with premarital
5 agreements, which seem to be somewhat controversial. I'm 6 an attorney practicing for 45 years. There are 14
7 attorneys in the department of the firm of which I chair
8 which do nothing but family law work. We do literally 9 hundreds of premarital agreements, litigate the 10 enforceability and validity of premarital agreements for a 11 number of years. I feel strongly, and I'm almost in 12 agreement with Mr. Pollock, with the exception of his 13 reference to the 60-day exclusionary period, that the first 14 parts of the proposed law are really a recitation of what I 15 regard to be existing law for the most part, they give a 16 little bit of balance, burden of proof being upon the party 17 seeking to say it's unenforceable, there's another party 18 seeking that, it has to be by clear and convincing evidence 19 is okay, and I'm more than satisfied that existing law that 20 the parties did not execute the agreement voluntarily or 21 any of the other three things in an event to do it.

22 The big issue that appears to be controversial 23 is the issue of 3106(b) dealing with the 60-day period.
24 I'm somewhat surprised at my colleague from Pittsburgh.
25 I'm an Eagles fan and we're very much softer than he, I

1 don't treat my wife as an antique car, or a classic car.
2 I've been married for 45 years, as long as I've been 3 practicing law, and I think it's wrong, honestly, to equate 4 the marriage to someone that you love and have lived with 5 for a lifetime with your children as the purchase of a car.

6 Sure, adults signed it, but even under existing 7 law today, you have all kinds of limitations on what people 8 can sign. Even the Simeone case, which says it's a mere 9 contract, nonetheless imposed an overlay that whether it's 10 consenting adults who sign a day before the marriage or 55
11 years before the marriage, you have to have a full and fair 12 disclosure. That was the condition imposed before you 13 could have a contract under Simeone. You have all kinds of 14 Federal and State laws regarding rescissions of contracts 15 within 48 hours. Nobody says, why don't you just sign and 16 let it go? In old days, we used to sign confessions of 17 judgment ordinarily and sign them in two minutes. You 18 can't -- it's cheaper to file suit and get a judgment by 19 default or otherwise than get someone to sign a confession 20 of judgment because of the complexities of going through 21 that.

22 And the idea that you can sign one day after the 23 marriage, be my guest, because that would be great. Your 24 bargaining position is then equal if not better, because 25 you don't have to be satisfied with an agreement that's

1 stuck in front of you 48 hours before the wedding takes 2 place. Keep in mind, if you will, that 26 States in this 3 country have some provision of the uniform premarital 4 agreement law, which has certain protections for people who 5 sign these agreements. You have to have a lawyer, there 6 has to be a degree of reasonableness or conscionability at 7 the time the agreement was signed, or there has to be a 8 degree of reasonableness or conscionability at the time it 9 was enforced. We have none of that. We have a bare 10 contract, and the only thing that we're suggesting -- 11 incidently, this concept of falling in love one day before 12 your marriage and getting married like what these movie 13 stars did recently, fine, they didn't sign a premarital
14 agreement. If they had to do it, they'd have to wait 60 15 days.

16 What we're saying is the following, and in 17 Simeone, the agreement was signed the eve of the marriage.
18 And the court went on to say that even if you didn't 19 understand the agreement, that's okay. Now, you can't even 20 do that sometimes now. You have all kinds of things in a 21 complaint. There has to be, in Philadelphia at least, in 22 Hispanic language or it has to be in a certain kind of 23 language. There are protections for certain people, and I
24 think people forget that when you get married and sign a 25 premarital agreement before you get married, you're giving

1 up something substantial. When you turn down a fancy car
2 because you're an adult, you're turning down a car. That 3 car has no rights under the Divorce Code. It doesn't have 4 equitable distribution, it doesn't have alimony, it doesn't 5 have counsel fees and costs. In a probate sense, and we're 6 not dealing with probate here, you have a statutory right 7 of one-third no matter what happens.

8 And incidentally, the one remark that was made 9 about definition of, unfortunately, most of the agreements 10 that are premarital agreements have lawyers on both sides.
11 Under the Susan Market, one of the cases that I cited in my 12 thing, you can't have duress under Pennsylvania law if 13 you're represented by counsel, short of putting a gun to 14 your head. So there can be nothing. What you really have 15 here is emotional turmoil.

16 Think about the classic cases. Simeone, it's 17 surprising that it still stands up, Simeone says that if 18 you signed the day before and all the guests are out there, 19 Dave Pollock seems to think, well, that's okay, go out and 20 tell the people who came there, gathered together, gave you 21 gifts, came from all over the country, go out and say I 22 can't get married. Now why? Because my husband or 23 husband-to-be stuck in front of my face 24 hours something 24 to sign, and he's the one that's going to back out of the 25 marriage if I don't sign. What kind of a position is that

1 when people who are getting together to marry should be put 2 in that position?

3 What we felt was the following. We had three 4 choices: Leave the law as it is, which is Simeone with a 5 full and fair disclosure. If you want to leave it that 6 way, then you're going to leave it that way with a lot of 7 litigation. Or adopt some form of the uniform premarital 8 agreement, which puts some kind of reasonableness or a 9 conscionability into it either at the time it was signed or 10 at the time it's enforced. We felt that's unusual because 11 you're going to have an awful lot of litigation.

12 What we said was why don't we do it this way, 13 treat it like a contract, do anything you want to do, but 14 if it's that important for you to have a premarital 15 agreement because your dad was a multi-millionaire and says 16 have a premarital agreement, do all that work and then plan
17 your wedding. What we did in taking the 60 days, we figure 18 it takes six weeks to get out the announcement, and we 19 tacked on another two weeks, so that's where the 60 days 20 comes from. It could be 90 days, it could be 60 days, but 21 in that way people can be fully informed. And I agree with 22 Dave Pollock, if you have 60 days before the marriage and 23 the invitations haven't gone out and you're a consenting 24 adult, you sign that paperwork, you have a lawyer 25 representing you, and there's no condition, you have that

1 lawyer, fine. Then there's nobody that can complain. It, 2 in my judgment, is worse than putting a gun to your head to 3 tell someone who's getting married in a wedding dress that, 4 you know, you've just run in and you got to sign something.

5 I can give you one illustration of a case I had 6 where I represented a female in Chester County, she was 7 getting married in her bridal dress and her fiance,
8 husband-to-be's friend who is a lawyer comes running in, I
9 got a gift for both of you, he says. It's a premarital 10 agreement protecting your assets, and they go into the 11 anteroom of the church vestibule and they're signing 12 paperwork she never even saw, it's witnessed by the maid of 13 honor, and the lawyer was bright enough to say at least the 14 following: I know you haven't had a chance to read it, but 15 it's here to protect both of you, she signed it. What is 16 she going to do, walk out because he's insisting that it be 17 signed? She never got a copy of the agreement, number one, 18 never knew that the lawyer told the husband that in the 19 agreement itself you have 24 hours or 48 hours to opt out 20 of the agreement after you read it, never saw that, she 21 never got a copy of the agreement.

22 After a 17-year marriage with three children or 23 four children, she says, I don't like the marriage, I'm 24 getting out of here, he throws the agreement in front of 25 her face that she never even had. I said, you signed away

1 all of your rights. I was able to get that agreement 2 turned aside because it was evident that nobody understood
3 the agreement when it was signed. That's the worst example 4 you have. But those things happen. And I don't think it's 5 so frightening in today's economy and in today's what we're 6 doing to have someone have 60 days to sign an agreement.

7 There are two cautions I have to give you. One 8 is the Bonds case, which I cite, and the Bonds case stands 9 for the proposition, and that's on the last page, that's 10 Barry Bonds the ball player. California takes the position 11 that we will interpret the premarital agreement that's 12 signed in accordance with the jurisdiction where it was 13 signed, but we're going to enforce it under our public 14 policy.

15 I say that because the question that arises that 16 nobody has asked yet, what happens if you have a premarital
17 agreement signed 10 days before the marriage in New Jersey
18 and then you come in and you live in Pennsylvania and you 19 want to enforce your agreement, what happens? I don't know 20 what happens. I suspect that there might be some policy.
21 We can't say that the New Jersey premarital agreement is 22 invalid because it was signed lawfully under the law of New 23 Jersey. Now, fortunately, New Jersey law has degrees of 24 conscionability and reasonableness patent under their law, 25 so it might not be a bad agreement to begin with, but if

1 you have that 60-day rule in Pennsylvania and you don't 2 have it in the surrounding States wherever they come from,
3 that's an issue you have to deal with.

4 I don't address the issue, I don't know what the 5 solution would be. I think that a Pennsylvania court would 6 have to define and decide, unless you want to orchestrate 7 it by legislation, as to what that position would be. The 8 minute you say that they're going to honor on a full faith 9 in credit basis premarital agreements signed in other 10 States, then you might as well get your premarital
11 agreements signed someplace else and live someplace else
12 and move back to Philadelphia.

13 The second issue which concerns me, but I don't 14 know what I can do about it, I can call it to your 15 attention, this only applies to divorces in the context of 16 premarital agreements. It doesn't apply in the event of 17 death, and that's unusual. I don't know whether you picked 18 that up. As it is now under Simeone, a premarital 19 agreement, either in the context of divorce or death, has 20 to have a full and fair disclosure, otherwise the contract
21 is unenforceable. Here as we're proposing it, because I 22 was on the committee with Mr. Dugan, and we couldn't get 23 the probate bar to go along with what we're doing in the 24 divorce context, I think it's a little bit awkward to have 25 an amendment to the Divorce Code which would provide for 60

1 days but then not have it applicable in the event of death.

2 And I would suggest that if you're troubled by 3 that as I am, that there be some legislation that amends
4 the probate law that would treat it the same way. I'm not 5 here authorized to tell on behalf of the probate bar that 6 this is something that we're advancing on their behalf, but 7 this is an amendment to the Divorce Code, and as an 8 amendment to the Divorce Code, in my judgment, it can only 9 deal with premarital agreements that arise under the 10 context of divorce and not under the context of death.
11 It's surprising to me, but that's the result of the 12 committee's work. We couldn't do any better than that.

13 JUDGE BERTIN: Fred Frank, unless there's--

14 REPRESENTATIVE HENNESSEY: Could I just ask a 15 question according to that?

16 JUDGE BERTIN: Sure.

17 REPRESENTATIVE HENNESSEY: The language says 18 that a premarital agreement executed within 60 days shall 19 be void. It doesn't say it should be voidable, it shall be 20 void, which would strike me as saying it's unenforceable 21 for any purposes.

22 MR. MOMJIAN: It's void for any purpose.

23 REPRESENTATIVE HENNESSEY: Including somebody
24 claiming a benefit after a death under the Estate Code.

25 MR. MOMJIAN: But it's only an amendment to the 1 Divorce Code. Our sense is that could not affect the 2 Probate Code.

3 REPRESENTATIVE HENNESSEY: Even though we say
4 that it's void and not simply voidable?

5 MR. MOMJIAN: It's void in connection with the 6 application of the Divorce Code.

7 REPRESENTATIVE HENNESSEY: But it doesn't say
8 that. It says it's void.

9 MR. MOMJIAN: You're right. If it can be 10 interpreted that way, it would be fine. I think it could 11 be enlarged. I think that the ideas literally promote that 12 idea. I don't think it takes a great step to amend the 13 probate law accordingly. I think it would be awkward to 14 even run the risk that there's going to be one premarital
15 agreement that has a 60-day rule in the Divorce Code
16 without a comparable reference to the Probate Code. It 17 could be solved in that way.

18 REPRESENTATIVE HENNESSEY: If we were to simply 19 add that it would be void for any purpose, would you still 20 think that that would be insufficient to have it effective 21 against an estate's claim versus under the Divorce Code?

22 MR. MOMJIAN: You guys are much better than I am 23 at this. But I would suggest that if you're going to say 24 it's void even in the context of a death without regard to 25 a divorce, then what you're doing is putting in the Divorce

1 Code something that really should be in the Probate Code.
2 And I just think that it's better to pick up the same kind
3 of language without all the, you know, and just I don't 4 know whether you could do that.

5 REPRESENTATIVE HENNESSEY: Sometimes you have to 6 wait for the particular vehicle to come along. We might 7 wrestle with a Divorce Code one session and not pick up any 8 amendments to the PEF Code until four sessions later.

9 MR. MOMJIAN: Well, we struggled with this, and 10 the three options, leave it as it is, adopt some form of 11 the uniform premarital agreement, which would be a good 12 solution, but we were concerned that these concepts of 13 reasonableness, conscionability, and unconscionability
14 would just motivate more litigation, this was a simplistic 15 thing. It's a simple contract, you could even waive the 16 disclosure, just give it 60 days so it can sink in, and 17 before you're embarrassed or terrorized or emotionally 18 distressed, it's a terrible time to be getting married to 19 go through the idea of negotiating something. And most of 20 ours, as I say in my statement, most of the agreements that 21 we negotiate are negotiated in a matter of weeks or even 22 days of the date of the marriage.

23 MR. HOWETT: Representative Hennessey, in 24 specific point of your question concerning how it might 25 affect the PEF Code, because it says shall be void, the

1 next section, which is the definition section, the reason 2 we defined agreements the way we define them here, it says 3 a premarital agreement as used in this section means an 4 agreement regarding matters within the jurisdiction of the 5 court under this part between respective spouses made in 6 contemplation of the marriage. So it only deals with the 7 rights that are set forth in the Divorce Code, and so we 8 try to deal with through the definitional provision of 9 premarital agreement that it only deals with rights under 10 the Divorce Code. Because we knew that the PEF Code 11 issues, because the probate people were not joining in 12 this, we didn't want to affect how a prenuptial agreement 13 would be dealt with under the PEF Code. Does that--

14 REPRESENTATIVE HENNESSEY: Okay, I think I 15 understand what you're saying. I just, it just seems 16 strange that we would have, I understand the idea of trying 17 to avoid amending one body of law, but you know with 18 language in the Divorce Code here, it would be hard for me 19 to understand how the estate's court could turn around and 20 say that it's void under the divorce law but because we're 21 not dealing with a divorce, or maybe we're dealing with a 22 divorce in progress and then somebody died not far offhand 23 that we're going to use that other special provision in the 24 back that we'll take what was clearly to be a void contract 25 and breathe some life into it.

1 MR. HOWETT: If the prenuptial agreement, as for 2 the ones that we draft in our office typically deal with 3 divorce and death. We say if the marriage ends because of 4 divorce, then X happens. If the marriage ends because of 5 death, then Y happens. It would not seem inconsistent to 6 me at all for a judge to say in a situation where there is 7 a death in a happily married family to say that even though 8 this was executed within 60 days, it's void for divorce 9 purposes, but we're not dealing with divorce, we're dealing 10 with the death provisions, so we're going to enforce them.

11 MR. MOMJIAN: But there are a couple points, if 12 I may. We deal with three contexts: Divorce, number one; 13 happy death, which it's hard to believe that a death can be 14 happy, but that's when they're living together and they 15 die, but also an unhappy death context where the parties 16 are in the middle of a divorce and there's a death. And 17 what generally happens in these premarital agreements, if I 18 may, is that a greater benefit is given to the surviving 19 spouse, or if there's a happy death and the parties are 20 living together at the time of the death of the person with 21 all the money. But if there is a death during the pendency 22 of a divorce action, then the benefit given to the 23 dependent spouse is more akin to the benefit given in the 24 context of a divorce. So that's the problem that I think 25 Jack is right, if it's a happy death, it may not be the end

1 of the world.

2 And I do think there's another issue that you
3 raised. If the agreement or the legislation proposed says
4 it's void, can the parties kind of say it's okay? Maybe 5 that's something that we could probably add. I'm just 6 thinking about it, if both parties acknowledge that it's 7 okay, I guess it's okay. But I don't know now whether we 8 have to put that in legislation or not.

9 REPRESENTATIVE HENNESSEY: Thank you.

10 SUBCOMMITTEE CHAIRMAN BROWNE: Thank you.

11 Attorney Frank.

12 MR. FRANK: As Judge Bertin noted, it was my 13 privilege to serve as the Chair of the Advisory Committee 14 Subcommittee on Grounds for Divorce. The committee's 15 principle recommendation on grounds was to lower from two 16 years to one year the period required to obtain a divorce 17 under Section 3301(d) of the code. The genesis of this 18 recommendation was the committee's firm belief that after a 19 year's separation, parties will know whether there is any 20 possibility of a reconciliation. Requiring a period longer 21 than one year holds a party hostage to a failed marriage, 22 which is contrary to the intent of the Divorce Code. We 23 also noted that the experience of having to wait two years 24 before being able to proceed with a divorce contributed to 25 a lack of confidence by the party in the judicial system.

1 They saw themselves caught in an attenuated legal battle
2 which put their personal and financial lives in limbo.

3 We recognized that this provision was eliminated
4 in Senate Bill 95. In recommending the one-year separation 5 provision, we were mindful of the concern that the existing 6 two-year provision did guarantee a period of support for 7 dependent spouse who would not consent to a divorce. Part 8 of the committee's recommendations, as Judge Bertin noted, 9 was to strengthen the alimony provisions, which mitigated 10 this concern. The change in the separation period was 11 linked to a reform of the bifurcation provisions.

12 Believing that the need for bifurcation would be lessened 13 by a shorter separation period, the committee provided that 14 there would be no bifurcation unless the parties either 15 consented thereto or one year had elapsed since grounds
16 were established, which except in the case of the rare 17 fault divorce would either be by filing affidavits of 18 consent or proof of a one-year separation. In the case of 19 a contested bifurcation, the burden is on the moving party.
20 That party must show, one, compelling reasons for 21 bifurcation; and two, that there are sufficient provisions 22 in place for the other party during the pendency of the 23 litigation to protect that party.

24 The committee's recommendations on bifurcation
25 remain intact under Senate Bill 95, except the requirement

1 of one year having elapsed since the grounds were 2 established has been eliminated. This recommendation was 3 also borne of the general concern that bifurcation can 4 create numerous problems for the dependent spouse, 5 including loss of health care coverage and protection under 6 retirement benefits. Thus, rather than putting the burden 7 on the dependent spouse, who can ill afford the costs of 8 drafting orders for interim protection, the burden is 9 shifted to the nondependent spouse to see that the 10 protections are in place.

11 A concomitant recommendation is that an action 12 for divorce should not abate on the death of one party 13 where divorce grounds have been established. Again, we 14 view this as a protection for the dependent spouse who may 15 lose valuable rights in equitable distribution simply 16 because the other party dies during the pendency of the 17 litigation. Under the current state of the law, in the 18 event of such a death, absent bifurcation, a surviving 19 dependent spouse is left with his or her elective rights 20 under the Probate Code, which generally would result in a 21 far inferior award to that in equitable distribution.

22 Lastly, an area of considerable litigation is 23 proof that parties have lived separate and apart either for 24 purposes of defining the separation date for marital 25 property, or for proof of separation under Section 3301(d).

1 This is particularly problematic when parties continue to 2 live in the same residence after the divorce action is 3 final. To lessen litigation in this area, the committee
4 recommended the definition of separate and apart be amended 5 to create a presumption that the parties separated at the 6 time of service of the complaint on one party by the other.
7 With service of the complaint, there is clear notice from 8 one party to the other that he or she wishes to terminate 9 the marriage. It gives the courts a definitive demarcation 10 point of record and should discourage frivolous litigation 11 on this issue of the separation.

12 Thank you.

13 SUBCOMMITTEE CHAIRMAN BROWNE: Thank you,
14 Attorney Frank.

15 Before I ask the members for questions, I just 16 want to extend my thank you to all of you for your hard 17 work as members of the Advisory Committee for the Joint 18 State Government Commission. From the Judge's explanation 19 of the process, it was obvious you did a lot of work to 20 provide these recommendations to the committee, and I think 21 I can speak on behalf of the Chairman of the Judiciary 22 Committee that we'll take the recommendations very 23 seriously in determining how to proceed on Senate Bill 95 24 and other recommendations to improve on. So I just want to 25 say thank you to all of you.

1 JUDGE BERTIN: Thank you.

2 MR. HOWETT: Thank you.

3 MR. MOMJIAN: Thank you.

4 MR. FRANK: Thank you.

5 SUBCOMMITTEE CHAIRMAN BROWNE: Representative
6 Manderino.

7 REPRESENTATIVE MANDERINO: Thank you.

8 Two areas of questions. First, Mr. Frank, I
9 just want to make sure I understood your testimony about 10 the one-year, two-year separation point, and what you're 11 saying is that you're okay with the legislation even though 12 it went back to two years because the one year was 13 contingent on also the revisions to the alimony portion of 14 the law that we didn't do in this particular bill, but in 15 theory you'd rather see one year, but one year needs to 16 have the reforms to the alimony section of the law? Am I 17 following that correctly?

18 MR. FRANK: Well, Representative Manderino, this 19 was viewed as an integrated document. One subcommittee did 20 not act in the absence of the other. And traditionally 21 what has been raised as to why we should keep the two-year
22 separation period was the concept that it guaranteed a 23 period of support, of rehabilitative support to the 24 dependent spouse. And recognizing this out of concern that 25 there had been a lack of uniformity in the application of

1 the alimony provisions, as well as we felt generally in 2 certain instances insufficient alimony, while we were 3 limiting the period of the separation, we also were 4 attempting to reform the alimony provisions so to 5 strengthen an individual's right to alimony at the end of 6 that one-year period.

7 Speaking, and Judge Bertin can speak to this 8 better, but I think that speaking for the advisory 9 committee, which is what we are here for, we have to go 10 back, we had a document that clearly recommended a one-year 11 separation, and that was the recommendation of the 12 committee for the reasons that I spoke about. A, that we 13 believe that whether you're going to know whether there's 14 going to be a reconciliation, it's going to occur, and of 15 course there are provisions in the code which allow for 16 mandatory marriage counseling. And secondly, that the 17 whole process has become so attenuated and people have lost 18 faith when they see themselves mixed up in this. And I
19 would just also add that for my own experience, the effect 20 upon children of the lengthy divorce proceedings, where the 21 parents are engaged in this type of a battle, is really not 22 in the best interest of the whole family, but rather to see 23 this matter resolved and to go forward is perhaps the best 24 thing that can happen for the children.

25 REPRESENTATIVE MANDERINO: Let me articulate it

1 a little bit differently then, because I'm still not sure
2 I'm understanding the point. From the point of your, I
3 don't know what I'm calling it, commission or task force, 4 the advisory committee, from the point of view of the 5 advisory committee, one-year separation with the alimony 6 reforms is what we want to see.

7 MR. FRANK: That's right.

8 REPRESENTATIVE MANDERINO: Senate Bill 95
9 doesn't deal with the alimony reforms.

10 MR. FRANK: And it also eliminates the one-year.

11 REPRESENTATIVE MANDERINO: Right, but isn't that 12 consistent with, I mean, you don't want to shorten to one 13 year and not have the alimony reforms in there.

14 MR. FRANK: Well, I think that that was 15 certainly part of our thinking, but it was not a single 16 factor causation here. There were multiple causational 17 reasons that we saw, why we saw the one year should be 18 shorter.

19 REPRESENTATIVE MANDERINO: Okay, so then you're 20 saying that we'd like to see it shortened back to one year 21 even if you can't agree to put the alimony stuff in here?

22 MR. FRANK: The problem is, you know, this is 23 like Humpty Dumpty and how do you put it back together
24 again, because we did have an integrated document, and I'm 25 not sure, faced with that decision, what the advisory

1 committee would have said.

2 REPRESENTATIVE MANDERINO: Okay, I understand.

3 My second question for Mr. -- Momjian?

4 MR. MOMJIAN: Momjian.

5 REPRESENTATIVE MANDERINO: I'm going back to the 6 60-day timeframe on the prenups, and I'm not troubled by 7 what it is attempting to provide. I'm a little bit 8 troubled by a solid, a specific number of 60 days, and 9 maybe I would be less troubled if I understood the impact 10 of post-marital agreements. If both parties of their own 11 volition choose to execute a post-marital agreement, does 12 that kind of like, you know, my last will and testament, 13 this is the updated version, does that trump, does that 14 void, does that precede the prenup?

15 MR. MOMJIAN: Representative Manderino, the 16 reason it doesn't is because on a post-marital agreement, 17 the parties have had the benefit of the full panoply of 18 rights and benefits under the Divorce Code, so there's no 19 question about it. In most of the cases, other than the 20 95 percent which are house and pension, where they're 21 represented by counsel, they've had the benefit of counsel.
22 So even if they haven't had the benefit of counsel, they've 23 had the benefit of the court system, the master system, the 24 judicial system, judicial review. So there you can have 25 agreements signed on the courthouse steps in two minutes

1 because you've been through a process and you have all of 2 your rights.

3 REPRESENTATIVE MANDERINO: Okay, maybe I didn't 4 use the right term. Let me be very specific with that kind
5 of hypothetical example. Whether it is, as Mr. Pollock 6 raised, whether it is two people who fall in love and 7 decide to get married on less than 60 days' notice, or it 8 was folks that were planning to get married and everything 9 is rolling around and finalizing all the documents and 10 dotting the I's and crossing the T's and just didn't get it 11 60 days before the date that the church was reserved, so 12 that a week before the wedding or the night before the 13 wedding the agreement is signed. Now, under this, if this 14 was law, that would be a void agreement because it was less 15 than 60.

16 MR. MOMJIAN: That's correct.

17 REPRESENTATIVE MANDERINO: Okay, but let's say 18 that I signed it one week before the wedding, fully 19 understanding that as consenting adults that we went 20 through all this thing and we were both in agreement, and 21 if we were both in agreement with it a week before the 22 wedding and it was Kosher, then we're both going to be in 23 agreement a week after the wedding. So we come back from 24 our honeymoon and two weeks after the wedding we sit down 25 with lawyers again and now we call it a post-marital

1 agreement. We say we still agree with those same 2 provisions that we agreed with a week before, and now we're 3 married and now I can't say, if I was the more economically 4 powerful person, the person that had the rights to be 5 protected, that I presented this in less than a week later, 6 but now a week or two weeks after my wedding I'm willing to 7 sign the exact same agreement again with that spouse and I
8 sign that agreement, does that now make what was void a 9 week before my wedding not void a week after?

10 MR. MOMJIAN: Absolutely, because then all the 11 rights were established, and there's no way in the world
12 that bargaining position is the same. So if that person 13 comes back from a wonderful honeymoon, then says here's the 14 piece of paper that I want you to sign, the wedding people 15 are out of the question, the gifts have been exchanged, the 16 family is out of there, there's no pressure, that person 17 then is a consenting adult with the whole rights and 18 responsibilities under the Probate Code, it's not 19 applicable under the Divorce Code, yes, that's an 20 absolutely sound agreement. It's a lot different than the 21 situation that Dave said, which is I fell in love all of a 22 sudden with a car and I can sign it.

23 REPRESENTATIVE MANDERINO: Right, so the fact 24 that a week before the wedding both parties were in 25 agreement but technically it was void because we have this

1 60-day provision in the law, a week after the agreement if 2 we put our stamp of approval on it again and call it 3 post-nup instead of a prenup, that is a valid contract.
4 The valid contract is now the contract that I signed when I
5 came home from my honeymoon.

6 MR. MOMJIAN: That's correct.

7 REPRESENTATIVE MANDERINO: And so if the intent 8 was pure with the eve of marriage presentation of the final 9 document such that I can execute it when I come home from 10 my honeymoon, then there's nothing to worry about. The 11 60-day notice protection is isn't needed anymore.

12 MR. MOMJIAN: But it's the pureness of the 13 intent that the problem, Representative Manderino, because 14 in most cases the bargaining position is so tilted that in 15 a million years you don't have it. It's not, 16 unfortunately, duress.

17 REPRESENTATIVE MANDERINO: Yeah, I think I
18 understand it. What I was saying was I like the, I'm 19 speaking personally, I do think that duress is legally 20 defined and what you were talking about, emotional duress, 21 emotional stress, et cetera, is valid. I think that's a 22 valid consideration for an eve of wedding presentation.
23 And so from that point of view I like the protection you're 24 attempting to afford, and the only thing that was troubling
25 me was the 60-day limit, and what you have just explained

1 to me is if the intention was pure, there's an easy way
2 around the 60-day limit, execute the same document when you 3 come home from the honeymoon.

4 MR. MOMJIAN: Absolutely.

5 REPRESENTATIVE MANDERINO: The questions are all 6 over, then the concerns are none.

7 MR. MOMJIAN: Absolutely.

8 REPRESENTATIVE MANDERINO: Thank you.

9 MR. MOMJIAN: Thank you for asking the question.

10 SUBCOMMITTEE CHAIRMAN BROWNE: Representative
11 Hennessey.

12 REPRESENTATIVE HENNESSEY: Thank you, Mr.
13 Chairman.

14 Mr. Frank, let me, in your testimony you 15 indicated that having to wait two years contributed to a 16 lack of confidence by the party in the judicial system, and 17 I guess that's the one who is the moving party, but I want 18 to ask you to take a look at it from the perspective of 19 the, who I've described earlier as the ambushed or the 20 surprised spouse, didn't expect this coming along. The 21 fact that there's a two-year statutory waiting period it 22 seems to me gives a little bit of comfort to the ambushed 23 spouse saying, well, I don't have to rush into this, this 24 is not going to be something that's done rather quickly.
25 I'm going to have some time to get my affairs in order for

1 life after marriage. And I guess I tried to write down a 2 question for you. If I listen to you, it would seem to me
3 that I want to ask the question from the point where one 4 party decides that he or she wants a divorce, does the 5 State any longer have a public policy interest in trying to 6 find a reconciliation or facilitate a reconciliation for 7 that marriage? Because it would seem to me that your 8 testimony was once one party has filed, well, we recognize 9 now that this is going to end up in a divorce, so let's get 10 this thing over and do it as an efficient, quick, and 11 prompt matter as we can, but it seems to me that there are 12 other public policy considerations that we ought to look at 13 to protect the surprised spouse.

14 MR. FRANK: Let me just give, by way of some 15 background, if I could. First of all, as Mr. Momjian 16 looked at this in a national context, first of all, 17 Pennsylvania is one of the few States left that has any 18 type of a waiting period like this. The vast majority of 19 States where one party decides that they wish to go 20 forward, they can go forward. And I think that's important 21 for the members of this committee to realize.

22 With regard to the issue of the spouse having a 23 period of time in which to prepare, first of all, under our 24 amendment, nothing could really happen until one year has 25 passed from the date. That is not, as a practitioner, at

1 the end of that one year, it's not like all of a sudden 2 things are done, the property is settled and the matter is 3 over. The process begins at the beginning of that one 4 year. And indeed, one of the things that we built into 5 this was that there would not, in all probability, be a 6 divorce at that particular time because of the way we 7 structure the bifurcation, but rather the economics would 8 proceed at the beginning of the one year.

9 In practicality, Representative, even under a 10 one-year provision, there are going to be two years before 11 the matter is finalized in which the party, the dependent 12 spouse or the ambushed spouse, has a chance to put 13 themselves into order. I, because right now, and that's 14 one of the problems, because it's really a three-year 15 process under the two-year statute currently. Built into 16 the Divorce Code are provisions where parties can request 17 marriage counseling, and the court, in its discretion, can 18 order a series of marriage counseling. I personally have 19 always attempted in my practice, particularly where I feel 20 that there is an opportunity, and one of the first 21 questions on the form that I have my clients fill out, has 22 there been any attempt at marriage counseling and to 23 counsel people particularly where I sense that this is not 24 a dead marriage, to try to see if there's a possibility for 25 reconciliation, and I feel that particularly strong ethical 1 duty where there are children involved.

2 But once that is done and where it is clear
3 there is no opportunity for reconciliation, the committee 4 did feel that it is time to move the process forward.

5 MR. MOMJIAN: I support the Mr. Frank's
6 comments. A commencement of a divorce action in Montgomery
7 County in January of this year which runs its full route 8 without any appellate rights at all, you're likely not to 9 be finalized with your economic issues until sometime 10 perhaps in 2008. You have to wait two years without the 11 consent being filed, and then I envision it that your case 12 is on a shelf, it comes off the shelf after the two years, 13 you blow off the dust, and then you go through a system of 14 prehearing statements, you have a nonrecord divorce master, 15 it could take nine months to a year to go through that 16 process. All you have to do as a recommendation or a 17 conciliation effort, then you just file a piece of paper
18 saying I want a trial before a judge. The trial before a 19 judge will have a short list conference in three, four, 20 five months, and then it will be listed on a protracted 21 list. I don't think you'd have that case finished until 22 sometime the year 2008 if it takes its full course.

23 That doesn't preclude the possibility of 24 settlement. There are people who do that, but in the 25 normal case that has to be litigated, if there are some

1 complex issues involved, you're talking about you're going 2 into the fifth year before there's a finalization of it,
3 without any regard to appellate rights.

4 REPRESENTATIVE HENNESSEY: So this would then 5 shorten it to four years.

6 MR. MOMJIAN: Pardon?

7 REPRESENTATIVE HENNESSEY: Shortening the 8 two-year statute to one would make it a four-year rather 9 than five?

10 MR. MOMJIAN: Yeah.

11 MR. FRANK: Let me just say one other thing, 12 Representative. It's not always the dependent spouse who 13 is the opponent of the divorce. In many times it is the 14 nonowning spouse, the person who doesn't have the majority 15 of assets in their possession who is the moving party 16 because they want to terminate the marriage. And one of 17 the problems that I have seen in my practice, which is in 18 the larger estates, particularly where one spouse is in 19 control of closely held corporation assets, is that that 20 party is the one who will oppose the divorce and who will 21 use that two-year period to begin the process of hiding
22 assets, of course all a sudden you see then, Representative 23 Hennessey, if I ever had a case where the owner/spouse came 24 into me or said in the courtroom this is the best year I've 25 ever had, being the year of the divorce, they would have to 1 call the paramedics.

2 REPRESENTATIVE HENNESSEY: For you or for him?

3 MR. FRANK: For both of us. First of all,
4 they'd probably have to commit him, and then call the 5 paramedics for me to revive me. They always take that 6 period of time to show that the corporation has declined in 7 value and we see transfers to siblings and all kinds of 8 mischief that are not in the interest of the nonowning 9 spouse, so that the sword cuts both ways.

10 REPRESENTATIVE HENNESSEY: Right.

11 MR. HOWETT: Could I support the provision as 12 well on one particular aspect. The bifurcation provisions 13 that appear I think on page 4 of the bill were put in there 14 to add strength to the dependent spouse, not forcing a 15 bifurcation of the divorce from the economic issues because 16 we're reducing it to one year and thereby making it much 17 more difficult to get a bifurcation if you reduce the 18 waiting period to one year. If you're going to leave it at 19 two years, and that of course is a legislative 20 determination to do, then you might want to give 21 consideration to eliminating from Senate Bill 95 (c.1) and 22 putting back in (c). Because (c.1) was an extra protection 23 for one-year separations. If you put in the two-year, if 24 you leave it at two years and leave in the bifurcation 25 provisions, it will actually lengthen the period beyond the

1 two years, because it is so much more difficult to 2 establish a bifurcation under (c.1) than it is under 3 current law.

4 REPRESENTATIVE HENNESSEY: Okay, thanks.

5 SUBCOMMITTEE CHAIRMAN BROWNE: Thank you.
6 Representative Harper.

7 REPRESENTATIVE HARPER: Yes, I have one
8 question. I would like to address the bigger issue that's 9 not in the bill, which is the one-year, two-year thing, and 10 I want to direct my question to Judge Bertin. I'm picking 11 on you not because I get to.

12 JUDGE BERTIN: Go ahead, pick.

13 REPRESENTATIVE MANDERINO: Come on, Kate.

14 REPRESENTATIVE HARPER: Because I actually feel 15 that the discussion we've had this afternoon of the 16 one-year, two-year provision, which is not in the bill but 17 the way things happen out here in Harrisburg could be in 18 the bill at some point in the future, maybe five minutes 19 before we pass the bill on the floor of the House, that 20 happens. I guess my question, Judge Bertin, is from your 21 vantage point of having practiced family law for many, many 22 years and then having seen it from the side of the bench 23 and not being involved in the trenches anymore where you're 24 worried about how it affects your cases or a particular 25 fact pattern, do you think there is any obligation on us as

1 the Pennsylvania General Assembly to consider whether we 2 make divorce easier or harder in Pennsylvania? I mean, 3 that's actually one thing we have to look at, and I just 4 wanted your views on whether or not the one-year, two-year 5 plays into the bigger issue of whether divorce should be 6 easy or hard when one doesn't want it. When they both want 7 it we have the three-month mutual consent provision. So 8 we're actually talking about a divorce where the party who 9 doesn't want it is not guilty of any fault ground and they 10 don't want to get divorced. The question is from a big 11 policy point of view, should we be sending the message that 12 it's easier or harder to get a divorce in Pennsylvania in 13 that one circumstance?

14 JUDGE BERTIN: Well, I don't want to duck your 15 question, and I don't know really if it's my province in 16 that regard. I can only say this, that I think it was the 17 considered judgment of the good lawyers that were on this 18 committee who one day are representing a spouse, for 19 example, that does not want the divorce to go forward, for 20 whatever reasons, and the next day a spouse that does, 21 Monday representing the husband, Tuesday representing the 22 wife, and I think that the sense was with the relative 23 backlog that you have in all of the other counties, all of 24 the counties I think throughout the Commonwealth, that a 25 one-year separation would serve overall the best interests

1 of the citizens of Pennsylvania, and I think that the 2 committee would be not be unhappy if it turned out to be a 3 one-year period.

4 But at the same time, there's so much good in 5 this bill itself that we certainly could live with the 6 two-year, but I think the overall sense was that the system 7 would work better and serve the greater needs of the 8 litigants if it were one year. That's not a direct 9 response to your question, I guess, but I think that's 10 about the best that I can do.

11 REPRESENTATIVE HARPER: So if I can understand 12 what you're saying, what you're saying is if you're in the 13 system, i.e. you have decided to get a divorce or you are 14 the unwitting other side of someone who's decided, that it 15 would be better as a public policy matter to get it over 16 with faster?

17 JUDGE BERTIN: Well, I think probably, you know, 18 when there is a separation, a separation just doesn't come 19 with a problemless marriage. I mean, there's strife before 20 the separation, and a one-year period of time is a fairly 21 substantial period of time. And as the other panelists 22 indicated, if one party does not want that divorce, it just 23 won't move forward. What you have to do is after that one-24 year period, there's something called a praecipe to 25 transmit the record, and then that record gets placed on a

1 waiting list before the equitable distribution master, and 2 each county has a certain amount of backlog with respect to 3 when that equitable distribution master is going to get to 4 that. And it depends really on the lawyers and the parties
5 how quickly they process and get ready for their ED 6 hearing. They have to prepare inventories and 7 appraisements, there's pretrial conferences, there's 8 appraisals that have to be taken care of, pension 9 appraisals, business appraisals, real estate appraisals.

10 REPRESENTATIVE HARPER: But all those things go 11 to the mechanics of the divorce.

12 JUDGE BERTIN: Right.

13 REPRESENTATIVE HARPER: I guess my question, and 14 I think this relates to the alimony discussion, I just took 15 a look at the alimony recommendation. The alimony is quite 16 generous, much more generous than anything I've seen in 17 southeastern Pennsylvania.

18 JUDGE BERTIN: The charts.

19 REPRESENTATIVE HARPER: The charts. Not the 20 amount, the duration. A 20-year marriage is not unusual to 21 split. If you think of somebody having a mid-life crisis, 22 a 20-year marriage is probably--

23 JUDGE BERTIN: You're talking about the 24 indefinite after 20?

25 REPRESENTATIVE HARPER: It's indefinite after

1 25, but it's about 19 years of alimony, if I'm reading this 2 chart right, which is huge compared to what you can now get 3 in Bucks, Montgomery, Chester, or Delaware.

4 JUDGE BERTIN: Well, you'd have to deduct from 5 that the years of the APL and the support.

6 REPRESENTATIVE HARPER: That's true, but still.

7 JUDGE BERTIN: And that deduction is for every 8 year of support is a year deduction, which is substantial.

9 REPRESENTATIVE HARPER: Okay, but I guess what 10 the committee was trying to say was, look, there are 11 dependent spouses out there that don't want a divorce, so 12 we'll give them more alimony or guaranteed alimony or 13 insured alimony or presumptive alimony, and that will 14 soften the blow that they're getting divorced a little 15 faster, whether they want to or not.

16 JUDGE BERTIN: No, I don't think it was that 17 way.

18 REPRESENTATIVE HARPER: No?

19 JUDGE BERTIN: No.

20 REPRESENTATIVE HARPER: Because I'm afraid that 21 the House or Senate, or both of us, may pass this bill with 22 an amendment making it one year and never go back and pick 23 up the alimony provisions that your committee worked so 24 hard on and which you did not finally endorse to bring to 25 us.

1 JUDGE BERTIN: Well, we didn't reconvene after,
2 we thought that the one year would be accepted and we 3 didn't reconvene after that, but the consensus is that we 4 still would like the one year.

5 MR. FRANK: Yes.

6 MR. MOMJIAN: Yes.

7 MR. HOWETT: Yes.

8 REPRESENTATIVE HARPER: But without the alimony
9 that you also recommended?

10 JUDGE BERTIN: Yes.

11 MR. HOWETT: Yes.

12 REPRESENTATIVE HARPER: Okay, thank you.

13 Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

14 MR. FRANK: Could I address that question, if I 15 may, more a little bit?

16 REPRESENTATIVE HARPER: Sure.

17 MR. FRANK: After 30 years of experience in this 18 field, my concern, Representative, divorce is inevitable.
19 It's going to happen. It's a question of just when. The 20 real issue is what happens at the end of the day when that 21 happens? And I think that the real public policy issue is 22 at the end of the day, is the dependent spouse going to get 23 a fair and just result? And I think that is really the 24 thing that we saw out of this report. From my experience, 25 giving that person one more year or one less year of 1 alimony pendente lite doesn't solve the problem. It's 2 proper valuation of the award, having people who understand 3 the economics and the tax ramifications and seeing in some 4 instances decent alimony awards going forward.

5 REPRESENTATIVE HARPER: Okay, but you're once
6 again back in the trenches, and I was hitting the broader 7 view, should we make divorce easier or harder in 8 Pennsylvania? Is being at the end of this trend a bad 9 thing? Maybe it's coming around on itself. You know, we 10 have a public policy obligation here. We also have to deal 11 with the people who are in the trenches, in the litigation 12 and who are in trouble. I'm struggling with the bigger 13 issue that today's discussion left largely undiscussed, you 14 know, what is the bigger issue here about Pennsylvania's 15 policy regarding marriage? That's all.

16 JUDGE BERTIN: Well, I think when the statute 17 was first adopted and it was three years, I don't know what 18 our studies were then, but I don't think there were many 19 States that had three years.

20 MR. FRANK: No.

21 JUDGE BERTIN: I think we stood alone there.
22 Then when we dropped it to two. I'm unsure of the national 23 survey, but I'm sure plenty of States have six months, 24 right?

25 MR. FRANK: Or less.

1 JUDGE BERTIN: Or less.

2 MR. FRANK: We started it at the time.

3 JUDGE BERTIN: But I think the policy decision 4 probably in your--

5 MR. MOMJIAN: But the policy makes sense because 6 it's too complicated, it's too layered. You can go through 7 rounds of support, rounds of custody, rounds of equitable 8 distribution. There should be some consolidation so that 9 you don't go through all of that. Maybe one judge, 10 somebody handles everything. Right now in any county that 11 we have, you go through layers. It's not a 3-ring circus, 12 it's a 30-ring circus, because you're all in and out of 13 court dozens of times. It's running up expenses. You have 14 every right to be concerned about the public and the 15 process of the divorce system. It's just too layered. And 16 practicing in Montgomery County, the suburban counties, you 17 know that the divorce takes one thing, custody takes 18 another thing, and the equity distribution takes another, 19 and then in Montgomery County you got a judge for two 20 years, and in the middle of the case there's another judge 21 that comes in and takes it over. It's impossible to 22 explain to a client why the bills are so high.

23 MR. HOWETT: And we believe that by shortening
24 the time, the costs will go down. The issue of is it 25 easier or harder might be stated differently, is it more

1 fair or less fair? Is it more expensive or less expensive?
2 If the divorce is going to happen anyway, and it will,
3 whether it's one year or the two years, then is it a 4 question of making it easier or is it just a question of 5 extending it and making it more expensive? It's that more 6 difficult. It's a hard question.

7 REPRESENTATIVE HENNESSEY: If I can weigh in on 8 that, it just seems to me that a lot of times when you're 9 sitting on this side of the table, as Kate and I and the 10 rest of us are, then you tend to look at how this is going 11 to be perceived by the public. And it would be clear to me
12 that if the bill were to pass saying that we're shortening 13 the waiting period to one year, then newspaper headlines
14 will say, "Divorce Becomes Easier in Pennsylvania."

15 MR. HOWETT: Yeah, no question.

16 REPRESENTATIVE HENNESSEY: And I think the 17 question that Kate's asking is, by divorce becoming easier, 18 do we then somehow undermine the concept of marriage as a 19 building block in the unit of our society? I mean, the 20 headlines are not going to say "Divorce Becomes Easier But 21 People Will Feel That They Were Treated More Fairly Before 22 They Entered the Next Marriage," or maybe encourage them to 23 enter another marriage, because it won't happen.

24 MR. HOWETT: We're not going to be able to 25 control that, and neither are you.

1           REPRESENTATIVE HENNESSEY: They will simply be 2 saying, hey, divorce is easier to get in Pennsylvania, much 3 the same as they felt that way when we went from three 4 years to two.

5           MR. HOWETT: You're right, that's going to 6 happen.

7           JUDGE BERTIN: Yeah.

8           REPRESENTATIVE HENNESSEY: And is that a good
9 thing?

10          MR. HOWETT: It's not a good thing that the 11 press is going to paint it that way because they're going 12 to be painting it inaccurately, but you're absolutely right 13 that it will be painted that way.

14          JUDGE BERTIN: Because you're not making divorce
15 easier. The question is, how do you manage that divorce, 16 because it's not like one year after the marriage you're 17 going to be divorced, because we all know that that's not 18 true.

19          MR. HOWETT: And this bifurcation provision 20 prevents that from happening as expeditiously as it does 21 now after a two-year separation.

22          MR. FRANK: Representative, I think there can be 23 perceptions, but what is the reality? And I think if you 24 were to do a study, the percentage of divorce that existed 25 in Pennsylvania when we had three years versus the

1 percentage of divorce we have when we have two years, I 2 would be surprised if there is any material upswing in the 3 percentage of divorce because we reduced it from three 4 years to two years. And I also would be willing to bet $50
5 to your favorite charity that if we reduced it to one year, 6 we are not going to see an increase in the number of 7 divorces in this Commonwealth. I think the reasons for 8 divorce are far more systemic to a whole sorts of other 9 issues in our society that have nothing to do with how easy 10 we make it.

11 REPRESENTATIVE HENNESSEY: Well, thank you.
12 You've certainly given us plenty to think about.

13 JUDGE BERTIN: Mr. Chairman, can I just add, on 14 the pension issue, I just want to highlight one thing
15 because I think you hopped out then just when Jack Howett
16 made a point, and I was watching and observing the pension 17 issue, which you were pretty lively on, and I think what 18 Jack pointed out was this: In the situations where you 19 have a real moneyed spouse and you have a spike of income 20 maybe two, three years after the separation, I think there 21 was an argument, well, this is kind of unfair and it would 22 not be appropriate to include that huge increase in salary 23 in those limited cases where that would occur, and I think 24 what Jack pointed out was very good.

25 The proposal that we have allows the judge to 1 treat each particular asset separately so that in the 2 instance of a high spike, and you have good advocates on 3 both sides, I am confident that the husband who got the 4 high spike could argue to the court that this, there's a 5 difference between a passive increase and an active 6 increase, so to speak, and if there were an argument

7 indicating that, gee, the pension benefit is so much higher 8 now because of this post-separation increase in salary, I 9 think an argument could be made to the judge to deal with 10 this asset and consider that factor, because all you're 11 really doing is defining what is marital and what gets in 12 the marital pot.

13 So now this higher spike is defined in your 14 marital pot, and a judge may be persuaded to give 30
15 percent of that marital pot with this high spike as opposed 16 to perhaps 50 percent if there weren't that high spike if 17 that judge were persuaded that that was equitable under all 18 of the circumstances. So we have great leeway and the 19 masters have great leeway in determining what percentage of 20 the marital pot one should get.

21 Now, heretofore prior to this amendment you 22 basically added up that marital estate, and I think most 23 people felt you just cut it one way 50/50, 60/40, and I 24 think this would give us some leeway.

25 SUBCOMMITTEE CHAIRMAN BROWNE: Well, one of my

1 concerns is at the time of divorce, you may not know about 2 that marital spike. In other words, you have the divorce 3 and then for whatever reason, the marriage could have been 4 detrimental to one of the parties, and then five, six years 5 down the road subsequent, there could be a huge marital 6 spike that had nothing to do with that past relationship 7 that fell apart.

8 MR. HOWETT: But of course then you're going to 9 have a much smaller coverture fracture because the 10 denominator will be much larger because it's now being done 11 on a deferred distribution basis. And under the code, the 12 preferred way is to deal with an immediate offset, and the 13 comment, which is part of the legislation, specifically 14 says that.

15 JUDGE BERTIN: Cash out and not do a QDRO in the 16 defined benefit. The preferred method is to quantify this 17 and then cash out, or as Jack says, make a payment and 18 don't even hook in.

19 SUBCOMMITTEE CHAIRMAN BROWNE: In a defined 20 benefit, usually you can't make the--

21 MR. HOWETT: Well, you value it and then you
22 give compensating assets. You give the house that's worth 23 $100,000 to the wife, and you give the pension that has a 24 present value now at the time of the divorce trial of 25 $100,000 to the husband.

1 JUDGE BERTIN: Actuaries value that future flow
2 of income, and they say, okay, if you had it presently, it 3 would be worth $100,000. And then you could say, well, the 4 wife should get half of that, which would be $50,000, and 5 she's not going to get it as a future flow, she'll take it 6 out of this bank account then.

7 SUBCOMMITTEE CHAIRMAN BROWNE: The actuary,
8 first of all, may not be able to predict that future flow, 9 and that's why I'm concerned about capturing that in the 10 marital estate, because there's circumstances after the 11 marriage is long done that this is something--

12 JUDGE BERTIN: Well, there's a cut-off date of 13 the hearing.

14 MR. HOWETT: Well, you capture what exists at 15 that time.

16 JUDGE BERTIN: At the date of the hearing.

17 SUBCOMMITTEE CHAIRMAN BROWNE: Yeah, but you're 18 saying that you take the entire time that he's vested and 19 working and the time that he or she is married, and that's 20 what you'll get in perpetuity on that pension. So if you 21 have an increase because of increase in salary or increase 22 in multiplier, that increase goes to that former spouse.

23 MR. HOWETT: Only in a deferred distribution.
24 In a perfect world, the determination of what one gets in a 25 divorce would be made the day of separation.

1                   SUBCOMMITTEE CHAIRMAN BROWNE: Right.

2                   MR. HOWETT: But because of just the way things 3 are, the judicial system, the fact that it takes time to 4 gather information and so forth, it's determined a year or 5 two years after separation.

6                   SUBCOMMITTEE CHAIRMAN BROWNE: I think in most 7 cases, in average cases you'll have a deferred distribution 8 because someone can't, in your traditional defined benefit 9 plan you will not have a distribution until some time in 10 the future.

11                  MR. HOWETT: Even though you don't have a 12 distribution until the future, you still have an immediate 13 offset. In fact, I would venture to guess that in 90
14 percent of the cases that even in a defined benefit plan 15 that's not going to come into pay status until sometime 16 after the divorce trial, in 90 percent of the cases there 17 will be an immediate distribution. The husband will get 18 the plan, if it's the husband's plan, and the wife will get 19 other assets based upon the present value of that defined 20 benefit plan, even though it's not going to go into pay 21 status until later. And in fact, the comment to the 22 legislation says that that is the preferred method of 23 distribution, an immediate offset. It is only when there 24 cannot be offsetting assets given to the other spouse that 25 you should be forced into using a deferred distribution

1 scheme.

2 JUDGE BERTIN: Because a lot of litigation can 3 occur years from now about how it's distributed. It's more 4 costly to do your QDRO, which is cleaner to have that 5 offset.

6 MR. HOWETT: But under either an immediate 7 offset or a deferred distribution, we still use the 8 coverture fraction. It's just that the fraction, if you're 9 doing an immediate offset, is going to be a bigger marital 10 portion of necessity because we're not doing that deferred 11 portion that adds time to the denominator of the fraction.

12 JUDGE BERTIN: And in a great many of the 401K
13 plans, you don't have that situation because it's much 14 easier to deal with because it's kind of like a bank 15 account, so you value it then. You don't have that 16 problem.

17 SUBCOMMITTEE CHAIRMAN BROWNE: Thank you both.
18 Thank you all for your testimony today.

19 MR. HOWETT: Thank you so much.

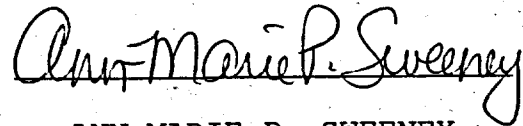

20 SUBCOMMITTEE CHAIRMAN BROWNE: At this time, our 21 hearing is adjourned.
